MODULE – 41

COLONIZATION OF ASIA, AFRICA
AND AMERICAS -1

SOUTH AND SOUTH EAST ASIA

- 1 South and South East Asia includes Nepal, Burma, Sri Lanka, Malaya, Indonesia, Indo-China, Thailand and the Philippines.
- 2 Even before the rise of the new imperialism, many of these countries were already dominated by the Europeans.
- 3 Sri Lanka was occupied by the Portuguese, then by the Dutch, and later by the British. England introduced tea and rubber plantations, which came to form 7/8th of Sri Lanka's exports.
- 4 The Dutch lost Malaya to the British, including Singapore, lying at the tip of the Malaya peninsula.
- 5 The conquest of Malaya and Singapore meant control of all the trade of the Far East that passed through the Straits of Malacca.
- 6 Indonesia and the surrounding islands were under Dutch control. After 1875, Holland extended her control over a group of islands known as the Moluccas.

SOUTH AND SOUTH EAST ASIA

1 INDO-CHINA

1 The area in South-East Asia once called Indo-China consists of Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam.

2 When England was fighting China over the opium trade, France was trying to extend her commerce in Indo-China.

3 In a series of planned steps which included threats of war, France became the master of Indo-China and the separate states were grouped together under a French governor general.

4 Frequent revolts against French rule followed, but they were suppressed or, as the French said, 'pacified'.

SOUTH AND SOUTH EAST ASIA

2 BURMA

- 1 In 1880, the king of Burma gave France the right to build a railway from Tonkin to Mandalay.
- 2 The French were trying to dominate all of South-East Asia. The British government, fearing French expansion, started a war with Burma.
- 3 The Burmese king was captured and sent to India.
- 4 Burma was annexed and became a part of Britain's empire in India in 1886.

3 THAILAND

- 1 Thailand, or Siam, remained an independent state, though sandwiched between the French conquests in Indo-China and of the British in Burma.
- 2 But France and England exercised much power and authority over its affairs.

SOUTH AND SOUTH EAST ASIA

4 PHILIPPINES

- 1 The United States joined in the race of imperialist expansion in South-East Asia in the late nineteenth century.
- 2 A revolt of the Cubans in the Caribbean against Spanish rule led the United States to a war with Spain. There was a revolt of the Filipinos against Spanish rule and the United States occupied Cuba and the Philippines.
- 3 The Filipinos revolted against the American occupation but were suppressed and the Philippines became an American possession.
- 4 The United States paid 20 million dollars to Spain for the Philippines.

CENTRAL AND WESTERN ASIA

- 1 England and Russia were rivals in the struggle to control Central Asia, Iran (Persia), Afghanistan and Tibet.
- 2 The Russian empire succeeded in annexing almost all of Central Asia in the second half of the nineteenth century.

1 IRAN

- 1 The conflict between England and Russia came to a head over Iran and Afghanistan.
- 2 Besides some minor economic interests in these countries, Britain was mainly concerned about defending her conquests in India against the expansion of Russia in Central Asia.

- 3 Russia and England set up banks in Iran to obtain economic control.

CENTRAL AND WESTERN ASIA

1 IRAN

4 In 1907, England and Russia reached an agreement according to which southern Iran became Britain's sphere of influence and northern Iran the Russian sphere of influence. The central part of Iran was neutral and open to both.

5 The division of Iran into three zones meant that the establishment of joint Anglo-Russian supremacy over Iran.

6 After the Russian Revolution broke out in 1917, the new Soviet government denounced the old Anglo Russian agreement and gave up her rights in Iran.

7 However, Iran was occupied by British troops. Meanwhile, oil had been found in Iran and British and American oil interests became powerful.

8 Iran remained nominally independent but was increasingly under the domination of foreign oil companies – the Standard Oil Company of the United States and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company of England.

CENTRAL AND WESTERN ASIA

2 AFGHANISTAN AND TIBET

1 Meanwhile, the struggle was on between Britain and Russia for mastery over Afghanistan and Tibet.

2 Finally, in 1907, Britain and Russia reached an agreement over these two countries and Iran. Both powers agreed not to interfere in Tibet.

3 Russia agreed to recognize Afghanistan as being outside her influence and Britain agreed not to annex Afghanistan as long as her ruler remained loyal to her.

4 After the overthrow of the monarchy in China in 1911, Tibet increasingly passed under British influence.

ROLE OF GERMANY IN CENTRAL ASIA

- 1 Germany, during these years, was extending her influence over Turkey and the Asian possessions of the Turkish empire.
- 2 A German company obtained a concession to build a railway from Constantinople to Baghdad and the Persian Gulf.
- 3 Through this railway, Germany hoped to promote her economic interests in this region, and on to Iran and India. France, England and Russia opposed this, but an agreement to divide the region was reached between Germany, France and England.

ROLE OF GERMANY IN CENTRAL ASIA

- 4 The First World War, however, changed the situation.
- 5 Germany and Turkey, allies in the war, were defeated. Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia (Iraq) and Arabia were taken away from Turkey and they passed under the control of England and France.
- 6 Thus, Germany as an imperialist nation was completely eliminated from Asia and other parts of the world.

- 7 Soon, oil and the concessions to control oil resources became the major objectives of the imperialist countries in Western Asia. American oil companies, in partnership with England and France, got oil concessions in Arabia.
