

LIVE

 Learning Space

NEWSPAPER

1st December, 2017

ITEM WISE EDITORIALS

48th WEEK

ROHINGYA...INDIA'S SILENCE

UPSC CSE – GS II

GS II... INDIA AND ITS NEIGHBORHOOD- RELATIONS.

Learning Space

LIVE

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS ... DISCUSSION

1st DECEMBER, 2017

2

Such a strange silence

India's reticence on the Rohingya crisis undermines its democracy and global standing

SUHASSINI HAIDAR

The Pope has been in South Asia this week, with the focus of his stops in Bangladesh and Myanmar on the reconciliation and rehabilitation of more than 836,000 Rohingyas (including 623,000 since August, according to the UN's International Organisation for Migration) who have fled gruesome violence in Myanmar.

Flurry of diplomatic activity

The Pope is by no means alone. In the past month, the U.S. sent Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to Myanmar, while a senior State Department team as well as the British and Canadian international development ministers travelled to Rohingya camps in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar. Singapore's Foreign Minister has made trips to Naypyidaw and Dhaka, exploring a role for ASEAN countries to help in the crisis. And earlier this month, Bangladesh Foreign Minister Abul Hasan Mahmood Ali took the European Union's Foreign Affairs High Representative along with the German, Swedish and Japanese Foreign Ministers for a survey of the refugee camps. No Indian leader has, however, visited them.

In a rare shift of position from not involving itself in the internal politics of another country, China decided to play a mediatory role in the issue, and Foreign Minister Wang Yi went to Dhaka to meet Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on November 18, and then to Naypyidaw to meet President Htin Kyaw. Within days, Bangladesh and Myanmar announced an agreement to begin the repatriation of Rohingya refugees back to Rakhine province in about two months, as part of what Mr. Wang called a three-phase solution. It is significant that within the same week, Myanmar Army Chief Maung Aung Mye Thaz visited China for more talks on the Rohingya crisis, while the country's other power centre, State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi, is now headed to Beijing for three days.

Biggest nation, smallest voice

In this flurry of diplomatic activity, it would be natural to ask why India has been so soft-footed and silent in comparison. As the subcontinent's biggest nation, neighbour to both Bangladesh and Myanmar, as well as the country most likely to be affected if the numbers of Rohingya refugees continue to grow, India in fact should be showing the most initiative in this crisis. Instead, through a series of blunders that began with Prime Minister Narendra Modi's own visit to Myanmar, India has allowed its voice to be muffled. Even as hundreds of thousands were fleeing violence at home, Mr. Modi refused to refer to the Rohingyas in his press statements in Naypyidaw in early September. Nor did India refer to anything other than the terror strike by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army while discussing the violence in Rakhine. It wasn't until two days later, and after some prodding from Mr. Hasina, that the Indian foreign office even issued a statement of concern over the refugee crisis that had reached alarming proportions, something the U.S. has now called a clear case of "ethnic cleansing". Moreover, in Bali, India refused to endorse a 50-nation parliamentary conference's declaration because it referenced the Rohingyas. Every other South Asian country, including Buddhist-majority Bhutan and Sri Lanka, endorsed the Bali declaration.

Later in September, the government began to dispatch humanitarian aid in an operation rather grandly named "Operation Insani-yut (humanity)", but was only one of several countries including the U.S., Turkey, Azerbaijan, Malaysia and others to do so. The government's commitment to Myanmar of a mere 3,000 "family bags" last week also slipped notice given the large numbers of those displaced inside Rakhine and in desperate need of assistance. The Indian effort, coupled with Foreign Minister Sushma Swara's visit to Bangladesh, where she didn't even spare a word for a trip to the camps, stands out not just in stark contrast to other nations, but to India's own record. In every way, the Rohingyas crisis is mammoth, with around a million men, women and children in Bangladesh and Myanmar living perilously. India, which has a tradition of rushing humanitarian aid and medical assistance, doctors and volunteers to other nations – for example, after the 2004 tsunami, the 2008 Cyclone Nargis that hit Myanmar, and the 2015 Nepal earthquake – has been seen to visibly hold back during the Rohingyas crisis.

Position at the UN

Meanwhile, at the UN too, India's voice has been consistently muted, ceding space to other countries to take the lead on the issue. The U.K., for example, hosted a meeting on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly with Myanmar's National Security Adviser and Bangladesh's Foreign Minister, attended by senior officials from Indonesia, Turkey, Australia, Canada, Sweden, Denmark and the U.S. At the UNGA's Third Committee vote, India abstained on a resolution calling for an end to military action, one of 26 abstentions on the proposal to send a UN fact-finding mission to Myanmar – 135 countries voted in favour of the resolution. While India's vote is consistent with its position on interventionist resolutions, it doesn't mark itself out for principled leadership of any kind. If anything, the votes have had a bearing on India's standing in Bangladesh, one of its closest allies in the region, whose leadership is struggling to cope with the flow of refugees as Ms. Hasina braces for a tough election next year.

In short, all of India's actions since the outbreak of this round of violence in Myanmar have negated its position as a regional, subcontinental and Asian leader. Regaining that stature will require a more proactive stance in being part of the solution to the crisis.

To begin with, the impression that the government's decision to push out nearly 40,000 Rohingyas living in India since 2012 is guided by its domestic political compulsions is not conducive to India's international ambitions. Therefore, it may be necessary for India to put its own concerns about repatriation on hold until it is able to work with both Bangladesh and Myanmar on the issue, preferably in a trilateral format. This should have been easier for India than for China, given it already works with them on regional issues as a part of BIMSTEC.

Spell out the refugee policy

The government must also iron out internal contradictions on India's refugee policy. Even though it is not a signatory to any UN refugee convention, India has a proud tradition of giving a home to neighbours in distress: from Tibetans in 1960s to East Pakistanis in the 1970s, from Sri Lankans in the 1980s to the Afghans in the 1990s. More recently, the Modi government even changed its long-term visa rules to help minorities fleeing violence from neighbouring Afghanistan, Bangladesh and Pakistan. If India now says it cannot help Rohingyas, who are a minority in Myanmar, it is either saying that Rohingyas are not Myanmarese or that Myanmar is not a neighbour, both of which contradict previous positions. The government's argument in court that Rohingyas refugees pose a terrorist threat wasn't used for Sri Lankans or Afghans. India also has a unique position as a country that is home to every religion practised in the region and must play to this strength.

For all these reasons, India, which has high stakes in global and regional governance, must ensure its voice is heard on the Rohingyas crisis. Mumbling as part of a chorus while one of the biggest human tragedies is unfolding across two of India's borders does not behave a nation with global leadership aspirations. Those questioning India's push for a Security Council seat have often cited its record as a fence sitter at the UN. All those critics must be silenced now by clarity in India's position on an issue where abstentions cannot suffice.

2 Such a strange silence

Date : 1st December, 2017

India's reticence on the Rohingya crisis undermines its democracy and global standing

The Pope has been in South Asia this week, with the focus of his stops in Bangladesh and Myanmar on the reconciliation and rehabilitation of more than 836,000 Rohingya (including 623,000 since August, according to the UN's International Organisation for Migration) who have fled gruesome violence in Myanmar.

Flurry of diplomatic activity

The Pope is by no means alone. In the past month, the U.S. sent Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to Myanmar, while a senior State Department team as well as the British and Canadian international development ministers travelled to Rohingya camps in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar. Singapore's Foreign Minister has made trips to Naypyidaw and Dhaka, exploring a role for ASEAN countries to help in the crisis. And earlier this month, Bangladesh Foreign Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali took the European Union's Foreign Affairs High Representative along with the German, Swedish and Japanese Foreign Ministers for a survey of the refugee camps. No Indian leader has, however, visited them.

In a rare shift of position from not involving itself in the internal politics of another country, China decided to play a mediatory role in the issue, and Foreign Minister Wang Yi went to Dhaka to meet Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on November 18, and then to Naypyidaw to meet President Htin Kyaw. Within days, Bangladesh and Myanmar announced an agreement to begin the repatriation of Rohingya refugees back to Rakhine province in about two months, as part of what Mr. Wang called a three-phase solution. It is significant that within the same week, Myanmar Army Chief Min Aung Hlaing visited China for more talks on the Rohingya crisis, while the country's other power centre, State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi, is now headed to Beijing for three days.

2 Such a strange silence

...Contd.

THE HINDU
INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER SINCE 1878

Date :1st December, 2017

Biggest nation, smallest voice

In this flurry of diplomatic activity, it would be natural to ask why India has been so soft-footed and silent in comparison. As the subcontinent's biggest nation, neighbour to both Bangladesh and Myanmar, as well as the country most likely to be affected if the numbers of Rohingya refugees continue to grow, India in fact should be showing the most initiative in this crisis. Instead, through a series of blunders that began with Prime Minister Narendra Modi's own visit to Myanmar, India has allowed its voice to be muffled. Even as hundreds of thousands were fleeing violence at home, Mr. Modi refused to refer to the Rohingya in his press statements in Naypyidaw in early September. Nor did India refer to anything other than the terror strike by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army while discussing the violence in Rakhine. It wasn't until two days later, and after some prodding from Ms. Hasina, that the Indian foreign office even issued a statement of concern over the refugee crisis that had reached alarming proportions, something the U.S. has now called a clear case of "ethnic cleansing". Moreover, in Bali, India refused to endorse a 50-nation parliamentary conference's declaration because it referenced the Rohingya. Every other South Asian country, including Buddhist-majority Bhutan and Sri Lanka, endorsed the Bali declaration.

...Contd.

2 Such a strange silence

...Contd.

THE HINDU
INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER SINCE 1878

Date :1st December, 2017

Later in September, the government began to dispatch humanitarian aid in an operation rather grandly named “Operation Insaniyat (Humanity)”, but was only one of several countries including the U.S., Turkey, Azerbaijan, Malaysia and others to do so. The government’s consignment to Myanmar of a mere 3,000 “family bags” last week also slipped notice given the large numbers of those displaced inside Rakhine and in desperate need of assistance. The Indian effort, coupled with Foreign Minister Sushma Swaraj’s visit to Bangladesh, where she didn’t even spare time for a trip to the camps, stands out not just in stark contrast to other nations, but to India’s own record. In every way, the Rohingya crisis is mammoth, with around a million men, women and children in Bangladesh and Myanmar living perilously. India, which has a tradition of rushing humanitarian aid and medical assistance, doctors and volunteers to other nations — for example, after the 2004 tsunami, the 2008 Cyclone Nargis that hit Myanmar, and the 2015 Nepal earthquake — has been seen to visibly hold back during the Rohingya crisis.

...Contd.

2 Such a strange silence

...Contd.

Position at the UN

Meanwhile, at the UN too, India's voice has been consistently muted, ceding space to other countries to take the lead on the issue. The U.K., for example, hosted a meeting on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly with Myanmar's National Security Adviser and Bangladesh's Foreign Minister, attended by senior officials from Indonesia, Turkey, Australia, Canada, Sweden, Denmark and the U.S. At the UNGA's Third Committee vote, India abstained on a resolution calling for an end to military action, one of 26 abstentions on the proposal to send a UN fact-finding mission to Myanmar — 135 countries voted in favour of the resolution. While India's vote is consistent with its position on interventionist resolutions, it doesn't mark itself out for principled leadership of any kind. If anything, the votes have had a bearing on India's standing in Bangladesh, one of its closest allies in the region, whose leadership is struggling to cope with the flow of refugees as Ms. Hasina braces for a tough election next year.

In short, all of India's actions since the outbreak of this round of violence in Myanmar have negated its position as a regional, subcontinental and Asian leader. Regaining that stature will require a more proactive stance in being part of the solution to the crisis.

To begin with, the impression that the government's decision to push out nearly 40,000 Rohingya living in India since 2012 is guided by its domestic political compulsions is not conducive to India's international ambitions. Therefore, it may be necessary for India to put its own concerns about repatriation on hold until it is able to work with both Bangladesh and Myanmar on the issue, preferably in a trilateral format. This should have been easier for India than for China, given it already works with them on regional issues as a part of BIMSTEC.

2 Such a strange silence

...Contd.

THE HINDU
INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER SINCE 1878

Date :1st December, 2017

Spell out the refugee policy

The government must also iron out internal contradictions on India's refugee policy. Even though it is not a signatory to any UN refugee convention, India has a proud tradition of giving a home to neighbours in distress: from Tibetans in 1960s to East Pakistanis in the 1970s, from Sri Lankans in the 1980s to the Afghans in the 1990s. More recently, the Modi government even changed its long-term visa rules to help minorities fleeing violence from neighbouring Afghanistan, Bangladesh and Pakistan. If India now says it cannot help Rohingya, who are a minority in Myanmar, it is either saying that Rohingya are not Myanmarese or that Myanmar is not a neighbour, both of which contradict previous positions. The government's argument in court that Rohingya refugees pose a terrorist threat wasn't used for Sri Lankans or Afghans. India also has a unique position as a country that is home to every religion practised in the region and must play to this strength.

For all these reasons, India, which has high stakes in global and regional governance, must ensure its voice is heard on the Rohingya crisis. Mumbling as part of a chorus while one of the biggest human tragedies is unfolding across two of India's borders does not behove a nation with global leadership aspirations. Those questioning India's push for a Security Council seat have often cited its record as a fence sitter at the UN. All those critics must be silenced now by clarity in India's position on an issue where abstentions cannot suffice.

2

Such a strange silence

India's reticence on the Rohingya crisis undermines its democracy and global standing

SURASINI WAIDAR

The Pope has been in South Asia this week, with the focus of his stops in Bangladesh and Myanmar on the reconciliation and rehabilitation of more than 800,000 Rohingyas (including 625,000 since August, according to the UN's International Organisation for Migration) who have fled gruesome violence in Myanmar.

Furry of diplomatic activity

The Pope is by no means alone. In the past month, the U.S. sent Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to Myanmar, while a senior State Department team as well as the British and Canadian international development ministers travelled to Rohingya camps in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar. Singapore's Foreign Minister has made trips to Naypyidaw and Dhaka, exploring a role for ASEAN countries to help in the crisis. And earlier this month, Bangladesh Foreign Minister Abdul Hasnain Mahmood Ali took the European Union's Foreign Affairs High Representative along with the German, Swedish and Japanese Foreign Ministers for a survey of the refugee camps. No Indian leader has, however, visited them.

In a rare shift of position from not involving itself in the internal politics of another country, China decided to play a mediating role in the issue, and Foreign Minister Wang Yi went to Dhaka to meet Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on November 18, and then to Naypyidaw to meet President Htin Kywe. Within days, Bangladesh and Myanmar announced an agreement to begin the repatriation of Rohingya refugees back to Rakhine province in about two months, as part of what Mr. Wang called a three-phase solution. It is significant that within the same week, Myanmar Army Chief Min Aung Hlaing visited China for more talks on the Rohingya crisis, while the country's other power centre, State Counselor Aung San Suu Kyi, is now headed to Beijing for three days.

Biggest nation, smallest voice

In this flurry of diplomatic activity, it would be natural to ask why India has been so soft-footed and silent in comparison. As the subcontinent's biggest nation, neighbour to both Bangladesh and Myanmar, as well as the country most likely to be affected if the numbers of Rohingya refugees continue to grow, India in fact should be showing the most initiative in this crisis. Instead, through a series of blunders that began with Prime Minister Narendra Modi's own visit to Myanmar, India has allowed its voice to be muffled. Even as hundreds of thousands were fleeing violence at home, Mr. Modi refused to refer to the Rohingyas in his press statements in Naypyidaw in early September. Nor did India refer to anything other than the terror strike by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army while discussing the violence in Rakhine. It wasn't until two days later, and after some prodding from Mr. Hasina, that the Indian foreign office even issued a statement of concern over the refugee crisis that had reached alarming proportions, something the U.S. has now called a clear case of "ethnic cleansing". Moreover, in Bali, India refused to endorse a 50-nation parliamentary conference's declaration because it referenced the Rohingyas. Every other South Asian country, including Bangladesh, endorsed the Bali declaration.

Later in September, the government began to dispatch humanitarian aid in an operation rather grandly named "Operation Insani-jat (Humanity)", but was only one of several countries including the U.S., Turkey, Azerbaijan, Malaysia and others to do so. The government's commitment to Myanmar of a mere 3,000 "family bags" last week also dipped notice given the large numbers of those displaced inside Rakhine and in desperate need of assistance. The Indian effort, coupled with Foreign Minister Sushma Swara's visit to Bangladesh, where she didn't even spare time for a trip to the camps, stands out not just in stark contrast to other nations, but to India's own record. In every way, the Rohingyas crisis is monstrous, with around a million men, women and children in Bangladesh and Myanmar living perilously. India, which has a tradition of rushing humanitarian aid and medical assistance, doctors and volunteers to other nations – for example, after the 2004 tsunami, the 2005 Cyclone Nargis that hit Myanmar, and the 2005 Nepal earthquake – has been seen to visibly hold back during the Rohingyas crisis.

Position at the UN

Meanwhile, at the UN too, India's voice has been consistently muted, ceding space to other countries to take the lead on the issue. The U.K., for example, hosted a meeting on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly with Myanmar's National Security Adviser and Bangladesh's Foreign Minister, attended by senior officials from Indonesia, Turkey, Australia, Canada, and others to do so. The government's commitment to Myanmar of a mere 3,000 "family bags" last week also dipped notice given the large numbers of those displaced inside Rakhine and in desperate need of assistance. The Indian effort, coupled with Foreign Minister Sushma Swara's visit to Bangladesh, where she didn't even spare time for a trip to the camps, stands out not just in stark contrast to other nations, but to India's own record. In every way, the Rohingyas crisis is monstrous, with around a million men, women and children in Bangladesh and Myanmar living perilously. India, which has a tradition of rushing humanitarian aid and medical assistance, doctors and volunteers to other nations – for example, after the 2004 tsunami, the 2005 Cyclone Nargis that hit Myanmar, and the 2005 Nepal earthquake – has been seen to visibly hold back during the Rohingyas crisis.

In short, all of India's actions since the outbreak of this round of violence in Myanmar have negated its position as a regional, subcontinental and Asian leader. Regulating that stature will require a more proactive stance in being part of the solution to the crisis.

To begin with, the impression that the government's decision to push out nearly 80,000 Rohingyas living in India since 2012 is guided by its domestic political compulsions is not conducive to India's international ambitions. Therefore, it may be necessary for India to put its own concerns about repatriation on hold until it is able to work with both Bangladesh and Myanmar on the issue, preferably in a trilateral format. This should have been easier for India than for China, given it already works with them on regional issues as a part of BIMSTEC.

Spell out the refugee policy

The government must also iron out internal contradictions on India's refugee policy. Even though it is not a signatory to any UN refugee convention, India has a proud tradition of giving a home to neighbours in distress: from Tibetans in the 1950s to East Pakistanis in the 1970s, from Sri Lankans in the 1980s to the Afghans in the 1990s. More recently, the Modi government even changed its long-term visa rules to help minorities fleeing violence from neighbouring Afghanistan, Bangladesh and Pakistan. If India now says it cannot help Rohingyas, who are a minority in Myanmar, it is either saying that Rohingyas are not Myanmarers or that Myanmar is not a neighbour, both of which contradict previous positions. The government's argument in court that Rohingyas refugees pose a terrorist threat wasn't used for Sri Lankans or Afghans. India also has a unique position as a country that is home to every religion practised in the region and must play to this strength.

For all these reasons, India, which has high stakes in global and regional governance, must ensure its voice is heard on the Rohingyas crisis. Mumbling as part of a chorus while one of the biggest human tragedies is unfolding across two of India's borders does not become a nation with global leadership aspirations. Those questioning India's push for a Security Council seat have often cited its record as a fence sitter at the UN. All those critics must be silenced now by clarity in India's position on an issue where abstentions cannot suffice.

IMPORTANT QUESTION

ESSAY / MAINS / GD / INTERVIEWS

"India kept low profile and almost silent in Rohingya issue and it goes against the ambition of India to become regional power". Discuss

The China plan

The devil will be in the detail of the Myanmar-Bangladesh deal on Rohingya repatriation

The agreement reached between Myanmar and Bangladesh to repatriate Rohingya refugees suggests that the Chinese proposal has found some traction as a solution to the crisis. It has been sealed after a three-month military operation by Myanmar in Rakhine, which resulted in around 600,000 Rohingya fleeing the province to Bangladesh, leading to a humanitarian crisis and a war of words between Dhaka and Naypyidaw. It is against this background that China stepped in with its three-point plan. Earlier this month, Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi travelled to Bangladesh and Myanmar with the proposal; Beijing later claimed both countries had accepted it. Under the plan, Myanmar and Bangladesh were to hold bilateral talks and reach a repatriation agreement - which has been achieved. However, the first step in Beijing's approach - which involved a declaration of ceasefire in Rakhine to halt further displacement and bringing immediate relief to the state's devastated Rohingya - has not taken effect. If this were to happen, the third part of the proposal will presumably take effect, with China providing economic assistance for the development of the Rakhine region as part of a long-term solution.

THE HINDU
INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER SINCE 1878

Date :25th November, 2017

Discussion on 27th November, 2017

IMPORTANT QUESTION

ESSAY / MAINS / GD / INTERVIEWS

Examine various aspects of Rohingya problem. Is the Chinese 3 pronged solution is viable? Discuss

CHINA AND THREE-POINT PLAN

- 1 Myanmar and Bangladesh have to hold bilateral talks and reach a repatriation agreement.
- 2 Declaration of ceasefire in Rakhine to halt further displacement and bringing immediate relief to the state's devastated Rohingyas.
- 3 China to provide economic assistance for the development of the Rakhine region.

INDIA

NEPAL

BANGLADESH

Myanmar
(Burma)

VIETNAM

Lao PDR

Rakhine

THAILAND

CAMBODIA

Bay of Bengal

Gulf

Learning Space

ROHINGYAS AND FLURRY OF ACTIVITY

China, in fact is playing a mediatory role. Recently Army Chief visited China and now the State Counsellor, Aung San Suu Kyi, is going to visit Beijing.

- 1 Pope visited Bangladesh and Myanmar.
- 2 Secretary of State for U.S., Rex Tillerson visited Myanmar.
- 3 British and Canadian International Development Ministers visited Rohingya Camps.
- 4 Singapore's Foreign Minister visited Naypyidaw and Dhaka.
- 5 Recently Bangladesh Foreign Minister took several representatives from European countries for survey of the refugee camps.

INDIA'S APPROACH ON ROHINGYAS

1 During visit to Myanmar in September, in the Press Statement, our Prime Minister refused to refer the Rohingya.

2 In Bali, India refused to endorse a 50-Nation Parliamentarian Conference's Declaration, because it refers to Rohingya.

3 Other Buddhist-majority Bhutan and Sri Lanka, endorsed the Bali Declaration.

4 India started humanitarian operation with name "Operation Insaniyat", but there are several countries doing it.

5 Sushma Swaraj visited Bangladesh, but she didn't spare time to visit the camps.

6 On the sidelines of United Nations General Assembly, U.K. hosted a meeting and India abstained on a resolution calling for an end to military action and 135 countries voted in favour of the resolution with 26 abstentions.

All its actions since the outbreak of violence in Myanmar have negated its position as a regional, sub-continental and Asian leader.

WHAT NEEDS TO BE DONE TO REGAIN STATURE?

- 1 The decision to push-out 40,000 Rohingya must be kept on hold and Government should discuss with both Bangladesh and Myanmar in a trilateral format.
- 2 India has got the tradition of giving refuge to Tibetans in 1960s, East-Pakistanis in 1970s, Sri Lankans in 1980s, Afghans in 1990s.
- 3 Recently, India changed its long-term visa rules to help minorities fleeing violence from neighbouring Afghanistan, Bangladesh and Pakistan.

- 4 Myanmar is our neighbour. The paradigm of Rohingya refugees posing a threat to National security was not used for Sri Lankans or Afghans.
- 5 India is unique because it is the Country which is home to every religion practised in the region

India must ensure its voice to be heard on the Rohingya crisis.

WE EXPRESS OUR SINCERE THANKS
FOR VIEWING THIS VIDEO

Presented by

Learning Space

For Suggestions:

suggestions@learningspace.in

To Contact us:

info@learningspace.in

OUR TEAM

G. V. Rao

Amrita Naidu

D. Sunil Kumar

L. V. Krishna

D. Chaitanya

K. Srikanth

G. Ravi Babu

D. Joji

K. Victor Babu

Visit us at:

www.learningspacedigital.com

0 8 6 6 - 2 4 4 4 7 2

0 9 8 4 9 9 4 2 2 9 9