

LIVE

Learning Space

NEWSPAPER 25th OCTOBER, 2018

ITEM WISE EDITORIALS

43rd WEEK

INDIA – USA – RUSSIA ... A COMPARISION

UPSC CSE – GS II

GS II ... International Relations

Learning Space

LIVE

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS

... DISCUSSION

25th OCTOBER, 2018

4

Outcomes versus promises

While Russia is seeking to cement its relationship with India, the U.S. wants India to make strategic choices

M.K. NARAYANAN

Russian President Vladimir Putin's whirlwind visit to Delhi earlier this month, lasting less than 24 hours, came just a month after the visits, in September, of U.S. Secretary of State Mike R. Pompeo and Defence Secretary James N. Mattis to participate in the 2+2 Ministerial Dialogue with their Indian counterparts, Sushant Swaraj and Nirmala Sitharaman.

Summit, dialogue

The summit between the Indian Prime Minister and the Russian President is now an annual event, the protocol having been agreed upon by Mr. Putin and Manmohan Singh in 2005. Summits have often led to spectacular breakthroughs – in the 2009 meeting between Dmitry Medvedev and Mr. Singh the logjam in the long pending sale to India of the Russian aircraft carrier, Gorshkov (since renamed Vikramaditya) could be resolved and, in the latest instance, the inking of the $5.4 billion S-400 Triumf missile defence system. The recent 2+2 Dialogue between India and the U.S., on the other hand, is a new concept, and while it has been hailed as a path-breaking event paving the way for an avalanche of state-of-the-art defence equipment from the U.S., the outcomes from this initial meet were clearly dwarfed by what took place during Mr. Putin's visit.

The 2+2 Dialogue – a format the U.S. employs with some of its closest allies including Japan and Australia – has given the impression that India has come within the U.S. orbit of influence, detaching itself further from Russia. This impression is further heightened by India signing on to the Communications Compatibility and Security Agreement (COMCASA) recently. Lost in translation, however, is that India still fancies a close relationship with Russia, one of its and most dependable allies.

A comparison of the Putin-Modi summit outcome with the promises made during the 2+2 Dialogue can hardly be a true index of what lies in the future. It may, nevertheless, be worth undertaking. The summit's mega missile defence deal clearly took the shine off any promises made at the 2+2 Dialogue regarding future defence acquisitions from the U.S. Russia's S-400 Triumf, possibly the best missile defence system in the world, comes with no strings attached. There is no Russian equivalent of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) in place. The S-400 Triumf can be deployed against all enemies, irrespective of any other defence choices that India might have.

Russian steadfastness

There were several other concrete outcomes from the Putin-Modi summit. India and Russia signed on to a document to expand civil nuclear energy cooperation and agreed on a second site for Russian nuclear reactors. They signed a memorandum of understanding on a joint programme in the field of human space flight, enabling Indian astronauts to be trained in Russia. They also agreed on the virtues of a regional security architecture to provide security to all countries in Asia and in the regions of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. This seemed to demonstrate a clear 'mutuality of interests'.

The 2+2 Dialogue, for its part, marks a paradigmatic change in the nature of India-U.S. relations. It hence needs to be viewed, more appropriately, as the culmination of a long-standing attempt by the U.S. to woo India, something that has been in the works for some time. As a prelude to this, the U.S. had renamed the Asia-Pacific as the Indo-Pacific. It had blocked more than $1.5 billion in U.S. security aid to Pakistan, allotting a mere $150 million in 2019. U.S.-India economic cooperation was stated to have grown exponentially within two decades, with the total goods and services trade between India and U.S. increasing from $11.2 billion in 1995 to $26.2 billion in 2017. U.S. foreign direct investment into India substantially increased during this period. The most important bait was India being accorded the status of a 'major defence partner'.

The underlying theme of the 2+2 Dialogue, notwithstanding all this, seems however, aimed at forging a possible containment of China strategy, with India partnering the U.S. in this effort. The U.S., at present, perceives China as posing a major challenge to its supremacy, and 'the most significant threat to U.S. interest from a counterintelligence perspective'. Whether China was specifically discussed or not in the course of the 2+2 Dialogue, it was obviously the 400-pound gorilla in the room.

The U.S. has obviously been preparing for this for some time, unleashing a spate of allegations against China. These include an implicit reference to the threat China posed to other nations in the region, including India, given that China had the second largest defence budget in the world, the largest standing army, the third largest air force, and was rapidly expanding its navy. Specific mention was also made by the U.S. to the Chinese navy's 'anti-access' capabilities and its 'area denial tactics', possibly intended to warn countries in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR) like India of the growing menace posed by the Chinese navy.

Differences in the outcomes of the Putin-Modi summit and the promises made in 2+2 dialogue are thus quite apparent. Russia was essentially seeking to cement a relationship with India that has existed for several years. It was not insisting on any exclusivity as far as relationships go. The U.S. wanted India to view foreign policy perspectives largely through a U.S. prism, and thereafter make a choice. For India to steer between this Scylla of Russia and the Charybdis of the U.S., however, is not going to be easy. Russia has already given a hint that it has the option of other choices, which might not exclude Pakistan. The U.S., meanwhile, tends to behave like a 'jealous mistress' and is insistent on India making the right choice.

The situation is greatly complicated by the fact that the world today faces a post-Cold War situation. The rise of China's economic power and its growing military might, and the re-emergence of Russia are significant pointers to this situation. The U.S., hence, no longer holds all the cards. Additionally, many existing precepts are undergoing changes. For example, the threat to the rule-based international order today comes as much from within existing democracies.

At such a time, the 2+2 Dialogue and the Putin visit within a few weeks of each have has left India with more questions than answers on what options to follow. India can hardly alternate Russia as it re-emerges as a key presence in Asia and Eurasia. Appearing to reject U.S. overtures, while the latter is seen making every effort to provide India with state-of-the-art defence equipment, and acting in tandem with it in groupings such as the Quadrilateral, could prove short-sighted. Mature strategic judgment is called for in these circumstances.

Undoubtedly, India and China have differences on several issues, including problems at several points along the border between the two countries. Many points of divergence with regard to the current world situation also exist. There is also a subliminal struggle between them for the leadership of Asia. Nevertheless, neither India nor China appears ready for an open conflict as it would cost both countries dearly. India is also not unaware of a U.S. lack of resolve to actively resist China's territorial expansion in the South China Sea, and in preventing China from expanding its naval activities in the IOR. The abortive U.S. 'pivot to Asia' is a stark reminder of the limitation of U.S. capabilities today.

Go by cold logic

India needs to ponder deeply on what is in its best interests. It should not allow itself to be easily persuaded in the belief that democracies, by and large, offer better choices. It should not reject, without due consideration, what is in its best interest. Its decision needs to be dictated by the cold logic of circumstances. Strategic ambivalence is not an answer to the situation that India faces today. Strategic integrity and autonomy, and mature strategic judgment are required in a world where disruption is the order of the day.

M.K. Narayanan is a former National Security Advisor and a former Governor of West Bengal.

4 Outcomes versus promises

While Russia is seeking to cement its relationship with India, the U.S. wants India to make strategic choices. Russian President Vladimir Putin's whirlwind visit to Delhi earlier this month, lasting less than 24 hours, came just a month after the visits, in September, of U.S. Secretary of State Mike R. Pompeo and Defence Secretary James N. Mattis to participate in the 2+2 Ministerial Dialogue with their Indian counterparts, Sushma Swaraj and Nirmala Sitharaman. Summit, dialogue - The summit between the Indian Prime Minister and the Russian President is now an annual event, the protocol having been agreed upon by Mr. Putin and Manmohan Singh in 2005. Summits have often led to spectacular breakthroughs — in the 2009 meeting between Dmitry Medvedev and Mr. Singh the log-jam in the long pending sale to India of the Russian aircraft carrier, Gorshkov (since renamed Vikramaditya) could be resolved and, in the latest instance, the inking of the $5.4 billion S-400 Triumf missile defence system. The recent 2+2 Dialogue between India and the U.S., on the other hand, is a new concept, and while it has been hailed as a path-breaking event paving the way for an avalanche of state-of-the-art defence equipment from the U.S., the outcomes from this initial meet were clearly dwarfed by what took place during Mr. Putin's visit.

The 2+2 Dialogue — a format the U.S. employs with some of its closest allies including Japan and Australia — has given the impression that India has come within the U.S. orbit of influence, detaching itself further from Russia. This impression is further heightened by India signing on to the Communications Compatibility and Security Agreement (COMCASA) recently. Lost in translation, however, is that India still fancies a close relationship with Russia, one of its and most dependable allies.

4 Outcomes versus promises

A comparison of the Putin-Modi summit outcome with the promises made during the 2+2 Dialogue can hardly be a true index of what lies in the future. It may, nevertheless, be worth undertaking. The summit's mega missile defence deal clearly took the shine off any promises made at the 2+2 Dialogue regarding future defence acquisitions from the U.S. Russia's S-400 Triumf, possibly the best missile defence system in the world, comes with no strings attached. There is no Russian equivalent of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) in place. The S-400 Triumf can be deployed against all enemies, irrespective of any other defence choices that India might have.

Russian steadfastness - There were several other concrete outcomes from the Putin-Modi summit. India and Russia signed on to a document to expand civil nuclear energy cooperation and agreed on a second site for Russian nuclear reactors. They signed a memorandum of understanding on a joint programme in the field of human space-flight, enabling Indian astronauts to be trained in Russia. They also agreed on the virtues of a regional security architecture to provide security to all countries in Asia and in the regions of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. This seemed to demonstrate a clear 'mutuality of interests'.

The 2+2 Dialogue, for its part, marks a paradigmatic change in the nature of India-U.S. relations. It hence needs to be viewed, more appropriately, as the culmination of a long-standing attempt by the U.S. to woo India, something that has been in the works for some time. As a prelude to this, the U.S. had renamed the Asia-Pacific as the Indo-Pacific. It had blocked more than $1.5 billion in U.S. security aid to Pakistan, allotting a mere $150 million in 2019. U.S.-India economic cooperation was stated to have grown exponentially within two decades, with the total goods and services trade between India and U.S. increasing from $11.2 billion in 1995 to $126.2 billion in 2017. U.S. foreign direct investment into India substantially increased during this period. The most important bait was India being accorded the status of a 'major defence partner'.

4 Outcomes versus promises

The underlying theme of the 2+2 Dialogue, notwithstanding all this, seems however, aimed at forging a possible containment of China strategy, with India partnering the U.S. in this effort. The U.S., at present, perceives China as posing a major challenge to its supremacy, and 'the most significant threat to U.S. interest from a counter-intelligence perspective'. Whether China was specifically discussed or not in the course of the 2+2 Dialogue, it was obviously the 400-pound gorilla in the room.

The U.S. has obviously been preparing for this for some time, unleashing a spate of allegations against China. These include an implicit reference to the threat China posed to other nations in the region, including India, given that China had the second largest defence budget in the world, the largest standing army, the third largest air force, and was rapidly expanding its navy. Specific mention was also made by the U.S. to the Chinese navy's 'anti-access' capabilities and its 'area denial tactics', possibly intended to warn countries in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR) like India of the growing menace posed by the Chinese navy.

Differences in the outcomes of the Putin-Modi summit and the promises made in 2+2 dialogue are thus quite apparent. Russia was essentially seeking to cement a relationship with India that has existed for several years. It was not insisting on any exclusivity as far as relationships go. The U.S. wanted India to view foreign policy perspectives largely through a U.S. prism, and thereafter make a choice. For India to steer between this Scylla of Russia and the Charybdis of the U.S., however, is not going to be easy. Russia has already given a hint that it has the option of other choices, which might not exclude Pakistan. The U.S., meanwhile, tends to behave like a 'jealous mistress' and is insistent on India making the right choice.

...Contd.

4 Outcomes versus promises

The situation is greatly complicated by the fact that the world today faces a post-Cold War situation. The rise of China's economic power and its growing military might, and the re-emergence of Russia are significant pointers to this situation. The U.S., hence, no longer holds all the cards. Additionally, many existing precepts are undergoing changes. For example, the threat to the rules-based international order today comes as much from within existing democracies.

At such a time, the 2+2 Dialogue and the Putin visit within a few weeks of each have left India with more questions than answers on what options to follow. India can hardly alienate Russia as it re-emerges as a key presence in Asia and Eurasia. Appearing to reject U.S. overtures, while the latter is seen making every effort to provide India with state-of-the-art defence equipment, and acting in tandem with it in groupings such as the Quadrilateral, could prove short-sighted. Mature strategic judgment is called for in these circumstances.

Undoubtedly, India and China have differences on several issues, including problems at several points along the border between the two countries. Many points of divergence with regard to the current world situation also exist. There is also a subliminal struggle between them for the leadership of Asia. Nevertheless, neither India nor China appears ready for an open conflict as it would cost both countries dearly. India is also not unaware of a U.S. lack of resolve to actively resist China's territorial expansion in the South China Sea, and in preventing China from expanding its naval activities in the IOR. The abortive U.S. "pivot to Asia" is a stark reminder of the limitation of U.S. capabilities today.

4 Outcomes versus promises

Go by cold logic - India needs to ponder deeply on what is in its best interests. It should not allow itself to be easily persuaded in the belief that democracies, by and large, offer better choices. It should not reject, without due consideration, what is in its best interest. Its decision needs to be dictated by the cold logic of circumstances. Strategic ambivalence is not an answer to the situation that India faces today. Strategic integrity and autonomy, and mature strategic judgment are required in a world where disruption is the order of the day.

4

Outcomes versus promises

While Russia is seeking to cement its relationship with India, the U.S. wants India to make strategic choices

R.K. NARAYANAN

Russian President Vladimir Putin's whirlwind visit to Delhi earlier this month, lasting less than 24 hours, came just a month after the visits, in September, of U.S. Secretary of State Mike R. Pompeo and Defence Secretary James N. Mattis to participate in the 2+2 Ministerial Dialogue with their Indian counterparts, Sushma Swaraj and Nirupama Mahapatra.

Summit, dialogue

The summit between the Indian Prime Minister and the Russian President is now an annual event, the protocol having been agreed upon by Mr. Putin and Manmohan Singh in 2005. Summits have often led to spectacular breakthroughs — in the 2009 meeting between Dmitry Medvedev and Mr. Singh the logjam in the long pending sale to India of the Russian aircraft carrier, Gorshkov (since renamed Vikramaditya) could be resolved and, in the latest instance, the inkling of the $5.4 billion S-400 Triumf missile defence system. The recent 2+2 Dialogue between India and the U.S., on the other hand, is a new concept, and while it has been hailed as a path-breaking event paving the way for an avalanche of state-of-the-art defence equipment from the U.S., the outcomes from this initial meet were clearly dwarfed by what took place during Mr. Putin's visit.

The 2+2 Dialogue — a format the U.S. employs with some of its closest allies including Japan and Australia — has given the impression that India has come within the U.S. orbit of influence, detaching itself further from Russia. This impression is further heightened by India signing on to the Communications Compatibility and Security Agreement (COMCASA) recently. Lost in translation, however, is that India still fancies a close relationship with Russia, one of its most dependable allies.

A comparison of the Putin-Modi summit outcome with the promises made during the 2+2 Dialogue can hardly be a true index of what lies in the future. It may, nevertheless, be worth undertaking. The summit's mega missile defence deal clearly took the shine off any promises made at the 2+2 Dialogue regarding future defence acquisitions from the U.S. Russia's S-400 Triumf, possibly the best missile defence system in the world, comes with no strings attached. There is no Russian equivalent of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) in place. The S-400 Triumf can be deployed against all enemies, irrespective of any other defence choices that India might have.

Russian steadfastness

There were several other concrete outcomes from the Putin-Modi summit. India and Russia signed on to a document to expand civil nuclear energy cooperation and agreed on a second one for Russian nuclear reactors. They signed a memorandum of understanding on a joint programme in the field of human space flight, enabling Indian astronauts to be trained in Russia. They also agreed on the virtues of a regional security architecture to provide security to all countries in Asia and in the regions of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. This seemed to demonstrate a clear 'mutuality of interest'.

The 2+2 Dialogue, for its part, marks a paradigmatic change in the nature of India-U.S. relations. It hence needs to be viewed, more appropriately, as the culmination of a long-standing attempt by the

ARTIST: ANAND K. SINGH

U.S. to woo India, something that has been in the works for some time. As a prelude to this, the U.S. had renamed the Asia-Pacific as the Indo-Pacific. It had blocked more than $1.5 billion in U.S. security aid to Pakistan, allotting a mere $50 million in 2018. U.S.-India economic cooperation was stated to have grown exponentially within two decades, with the total goods and services trade between India and U.S. increasing from $12.2 billion in 1995 to $26.2 billion in 2017. U.S. foreign direct investment into India substantially increased during this period. The most important leit was India being accorded the status of a 'major defence partner'.

The underlying theme of the 2+2 Dialogue, notwithstanding all this, seems, however, aimed at forging a possible containment of China strategy, with India partnering the U.S. in this effort. The U.S., at present, perceives China as posing a major challenge to its supremacy, and the most significant threat to U.S. interest from a counterintelligence perspective. Whether China was specifically discussed or not in the course of the 2+2 Dialogue, it was obviously the 400-pound gorilla in the room.

The U.S. has obviously been preparing for this for some time, unleashing a spate of allegations against China. These include an implicit reference to the threat China posed to other nations in the region, including India, given that China had the second largest defence budget in the world, the largest standing army, the third largest air force, and was rapidly expanding its navy. Specific mention was also made by the U.S. to the Chinese navy's 'anti-access' capabilities and its 'area denial' tactics, possibly intended to warn countries in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR) like India of the growing menace posed by the Chinese navy.

Differences in the outcomes of the Putin-Modi summit and the promises made in 2+2 dialogue are thus quite apparent. Russia was essentially seeking to cement a relationship with India that has existed for several years. It was not insisting on any exclusivity as far as relationships go. The U.S. wanted India to view foreign policy perspectives largely through a U.S. prism, and thereafter make a choice. For India to steer between this Scylla of Russia and the Charybdis of the U.S., however, is not going to be easy. Russia has already given a hint that it has the option of other choices, which might not exclude Pakistan. The U.S., meanwhile, tends to behave like a 'jealous mistress' and is insistent on India making the right choice.

The situation is greatly complicated by the fact that the world today faces a post-Gold War situation. The rise of China's economic power and its growing military might, and the re-emergence of Russia as significant powers in this situation. The U.S., hence, no longer holds all the cards. Additionally, many existing percepts are undergoing changes. For example, the threat to the rules-based international order today comes as much from within existing democracies.

At such a time, the 2+2 Dialogue and the Putin visit within a few weeks of each other have left India with more questions than answers on what options to follow. India can hardly alienate Russia as it re-emerges as a key presence in Asia and Eurasia. Appearing to reject U.S. overtures, while the latter is seen making every effort to provide India with state-of-the-art defence equipment, and acting in tandem with it in groupings such as the Quadrilateral, could prove short-sighted. Mature strategic judgment is called for in these circumstances.

Undoubtedly, India and China have differences on several issues, including problems at several points along the border between the two countries. Many points of divergence with regard to the current world situation also exist. There is also a subliminal struggle between them for the leadership of Asia. Nevertheless, neither India nor China appears ready for an open conflict as it would cost both countries dearly. India is also not unaware of a U.S. lack of resolve to actively resist China's territorial expansion in the South China Sea, and in preventing China from expanding its naval activities in the IOR. The abortive U.S. 'pivot to Asia' is a stark reminder of the limitation of U.S. capabilities today.

Go by cold logic

India needs to ponder deeply on what is in its best interests. It should not allow itself to be easily persuaded in the belief that democracies, by and large, offer better choices. It should not reject, without due consideration, what is in its best interest. Its decision needs to be dictated by the cold logic of circumstances. Strategic ambivalence is not an answer to the situation that India faces today. Strategic integrity and autonomy, and mature strategic judgment are required in a world where disruption is the order of the day.

R.K. Narayanan is a former National Security Advisor and a former Governor of West Bengal.

UPSC CSE – GS II

GS II ... International Relations

Effect of policies and politics of developed and developing countries on India's interests, Indian diaspora.

IMPORTANT QUESTION

ESSAY/ MAINS / GD / INTERVIEWS

Through 2+2 Dialogue and COMCASA, an impression is created that India is coming under the orbit of influence of USA. Experts point out that India should maintain strategic balance. Critically analyze the issue in totality.

THE HINDU
INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER SINCE 1878

24th October, 2018

- The Summit became an annual event. It was agreed upon by Mr. Putin and Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2005, they led to spectacular breakthroughs.
- In 2009 meeting, it was decided to solve the issue of sale of Russian aircraft carrier, Gorshkov (Vikramaditya).
- Now, $ 5.43 bn S-400 Triumf missile defence system issue is resolved.
- S-400 Triumf is the best missile defence system in the World.
- No conditions attached for the purchase.
- It can be deployed against all enemies, irrespective of any defence choice.

- '2+2 Dialogue' is the format which the US employs with some of its closest allies including Japan and Australia.
- It gave the impression that India has come within the US orbit of influence.
- This is further heightened by COMCASA.

MORE ON INDIA-RUSSIA SUMMIT

There is a clear mutuality of interests!

- 1 They signed a document to expand civil nuclear energy cooperation.
- 2 They agreed on second site for Russian nuclear reactors.
- 3 There is an understanding on a joint programme in the field of human space-flight, which enables Indian astronauts to be trained in Russia.
- 4 They also agreed on the virtues of regional security architecture, to provide security to all the countries in Asia and in the regions of the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

INDIA-USA IN RECENT TIMES!

- 1 U.S. renamed the Asia-Pacific as the Indo-Pacific.
- 2 It blocked more than $ 1.5 bn in U.S. security aid to Pakistan, allotting just $ 150 mn in 2019.
- 3 The economic cooperation has grown exponentially within two decades, with the total goods and services trade between India and U.S. increased from $ 11 bn in 1995 to $ 126 bn in 2017.
- 4 U.S. accorded the status of 'Major Defence Partner'.

- 5 U.S. Foreign Direct Investment substantially increased during the two-decade period.

The underlying theme of the 2+2 Dialogue, seems to be forging a possible containment of China strategy, with India partnering the U.S. in this effort.

WHY USA IS WORRIED ABOUT CHINA?

- 1 China's investments through BRI are expected to get huge clout for China in several countries.
- 2 China's forays against the rule-based International Order in South China Sea.

- 3 The suspicion on theft of technology/ coercion by Chinese authorities on MNCs.
- 4 The allegations of currency manipulation in China.
- 5 Chinese naval presence in Indian Ocean Region and its "anti-access capabilities" and its "area denial tactics".
- 6 Chinese strategy to internationalise its currency Yuan.
- 7 Chinese actions when one looks at countries like North Korea.

CAN U.S. RESTRAIN CHINA?

China has the second largest defence budget in the world, the largest standing Army, the third largest Air Force and rapidly expanding Navy.

1

There is clearly lack of clear resolve, to actively resist China's territorial expansion in the South China Sea, and in preventing China from expanding its naval activities in the Indian Ocean Region.

2

It aborted "Pivot to Asia", this shows limitations of U.S. capabilities.

RUSSIA's STRATEGY

- Russia was seeking to cement a relationship with India that has existed for several years.
- It is not insisting on any exclusivity.
- Russia's defence collaborations comes without many conditions.

U.S.' STRATEGY

- US wanted India to view foreign policy perspectives through the U.S. prism and thereafter, make a choice.
- The U.S. is behaving in such a way and insistent on India making the "right choice".

WHAT IS THE PRESENT DAY POST-COLD WAR SITUATION?

Matured strategic judgement is called for under these circumstances.

- 1 The rise of China's economic power and its growing military might and re-emergence of Russia are reality today.
- 2 U.S. no longer holds all the cards.
- 3 Many existing preceptions are undergoing changes.
- 4 The threat to the rule-based International Order is becoming the norm, even within existing democracies.

WHAT NEEDS TO BE DONE?

- 1 India should not allow itself to be easily persuaded in the belief that democracies offer better choices.
- 2 It should not reject, without due consideration, what is in its best interest.
- 3 Its decision needs to be dictated by the cold logic of circumstances.
- 4 Strategic ambivalence is not answer to the situation that India faces today.
- 5 Strategic integrity and autonomy and mature strategic judgment are required in a World, where disruption is the Order of the Day.

WE EXPRESS OUR SINCERE THANKS
FOR VIEWING THIS VIDEO

Presented by

Learning Space

For Suggestions:

suggestions@learningspace.in

To Contact us:

info@learningspace.in

OUR TEAM

G. V. Rao

K. Srikanth

D. Sunil Kumar

L. V. Krishna

Y. Deepthi

Amrita Naidu

M. Binukrishna

G. Ravi Babu

D. Joji

K. Victor Babu

Visit us at:

www.learningspacedigital.com

0 8 6 6 -2 4 4 4 4 7 2

0 9 8 4 9 9 4 2 2 9 9