- HINDUSTANI MUSIC
- CARNATIC MUSIC

MODULE – 1

INTRODUCTION

1 Music and dance along with theatre and puppetry, constitutes the performing arts.

2 Thus, these are those art forms which are linked to the performance by the artist as contrasted with the visual arts (architecture, sculpture, and painting) and literary arts (poem, prose, and drama).

INTRODUCTION

3 India has an ancient and rich tradition of performing arts which has flourished under the patronage of kings and rulers as well as amongst the common masses as folk arts.

4 While the ancient music was ritualistic and devotional, its character underwent a gradual change in the medieval period and it assumed a character with which we are more familiar in modern times.

Reference, to music is obtained in ancient times as early as in the Vedic texts, particularly the Samveda.

EVOLUTION OF MEDIEVAL MUSIC

Some salient aspects of evolution of medieval music is as below:

| HINDUSTANI                                                                | CARNATIC                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Evolved under the Persian-Arabic influence was popular in North India     | Was popular in the South.    |
| Emphasizes on musical structures and gives more freedom for improvisation | This is more Kriti oriented. |

- 1 Music in medieval times was deeply influenced by the Islamic rule which brought Arabic and Persian influence.
- 2 There was evolution of different kinds of music.
- 3 Classical music evolved in this period (around 14th century CE) into two distinct styles, the Hindustani music and the Carnatic music.

EVOLUTION OF MEDIEVAL MUSIC

4

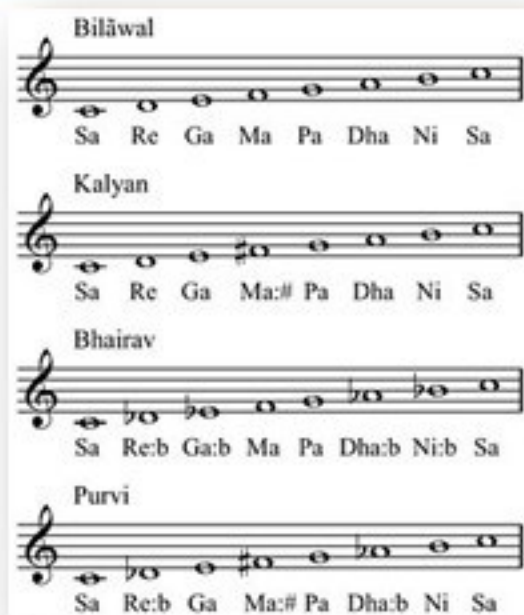

- A system of Gharanas emerged in this phase, particularly in the North Indian music.
- The system referred to a tradition of music identified with a family or a house of the origin of music.
- The musicians owed allegiance to the particular style of music and had a lineage of apprenticeship (like the guru and shishya).

FUNDAMENTALS OF INDIAN MUSIC

Swara, Raga, and Taal are said to be the three fundamental elements of Indian music

SWARA

1 This refers to the pitch, notes, or scale degree in a musical composition.

2 As per the Hindustani system of music, the swaras are Sadja (Sa), Risabha (or Re), Gandharva (Ga), Madhyama (Ma), Panchama (Pa), Dhaivata (Dha), and Nishada (Ni).

FUNDAMENTALS OF INDIAN MUSIC

RAGA

The six principal ragas are:

- i. Hindola Raga: Time-dawn; season-spring; mood-romantic as of a young couple.
- ii. Deepak Raga: Time-night; season-summer; mood-compassion.
- iii. Megha Raga: Time-mid day; season-monsoon; mood-courage
- iv. Sri Raga: Time - evening; season - winter; mood-happiness
- v. Malkauns Raga: Time-midnight; season-winter; mood-youthful love
- vi. Bhairavi: Time-morning; season-autumn; mood-peace and devotion

- 1 A combination of Swaras gives rise to ragas with their being at least five Swaras in a raga.
- 2 The Audava/Odava raga contains five swaras, the Shadava raga contains six swaras, while Sampurna raga contains all seven swaras.
- 3 In Hindustani music, there are six principal ragas which are specific to season, time of the day, mood etc.
- 4 However in the Carnatic music, the number of ragas are much more.

FUNDAMENTALS OF INDIAN MUSIC

TAAL

- 1 Taal refers to the rhythmic arrangements of beats in a musical composition.
- 2 The beats are arranged in a cyclical manner and can range from three beats to 108 beats.
