

MUST FOR EVERY STUDENT ... FOR ALL COMPETITIVE EXAMS

ENGLISH MADE SIMPLE!

LEARN WITH GVR SIR

MODULE - 13

Cogent : Something that is convincing for the mind to accept and believe.

123

Example :

At the meeting, the nature enthusiasts presented many cogent arguments in support of protecting the forest to minimize soil erosion.

Cogent : The reason that is clearly expressed and persuades people to believe it.

123

Example :
The educationist made a cogent argument for improving Early Childhood Care and Education (ECCE).

Indomitable : Used to say that someone is strong, brave, determined and difficult to defeat or frighten.

124

Example :
Many individuals set lofty goals, but few reach pinnacle through their indomitable spirit and tenacity.

Unwavering : Never moving or looking away from something.

125

Example :
The Konkan Railway project faced insurmountable challenges. However, the belief of the project head E. Sreedharan had been unwavering.

Precocious : Showing mental development or achievement much earlier than usual.

126

Example :
She is a precocious child, who cleared Class 10 exam at the age of 11.

Precocious : Showing mental development or achievement much earlier than usual.

126

Example :
Radha gave her first Kuchipudi performance at the precocious age of six years.

Venerable : Deserving respect because of age, high position or religious or historical importance.

127

Example :
Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) is a venerable institution.

Venerable : Stresses the impressiveness and dignity of great age.

127

Example :
The family's venerable patriarch died recently.

Archaic : Implies having the character or characteristics of a much earlier time.

128

Example :
There are several archaic laws in our statute books.

Obsolete : Not in use anymore, having been replaced by something newer and better one.

129

Example :

Kerosene lamps became obsolete across the country.

Obsolete : Not in use anymore, having been replaced by something newer and better one.

129

Example :
Conventional typewriters became obsolete with personal computers.

Obsolete : Not in use anymore, having been replaced by something newer and better one.

129

Example :
Payments through cheques may become obsolete with the evolution of various digital payment mechanisms.

Infamous : Famous for something considered bad.

130

Example :
Several individuals are becoming infamous through social media with their bigoted behaviour.

Infamous : Famous for something considered bad.

130

Example :

The town is infamous for its series of murders.

Ignominious : Embarrassing because of being a complete failure.

131

Example : West Indies has ignominious exit from 2023 Cricket World Cup.

Ignominious : Not following standards of honor and decency.

131

Example :
Quite often, inhumane ignominious treatment of the prisoners comes to the forefront in India.

18-09-2023

JUDGE, NOT SECRETARY

To protect Election Commission's autonomy and dignity, ECs need to remain equivalent to SC judge, not Cabinet Secretary

THE STRENGTH AND resilience of institutions in a democracy derive from both legal provisions and a climate of respect and reciprocity. In a time, therefore, when the executive armed with a large mandate does not hesitate to weaponise it against political opponents and unelected institutions, the legislative move to downgrade the status of members of the Election Commission is disquieting. A Bill listed for discussion in the Special Session of Parliament proposes to do just that. Currently, the poll monitors are treated as equivalent to Supreme Court judges. But a clause in the Chief Election Commissioner and Other Election Commissioners (Appointment, Conditions of Service and Term of Office) Bill, 2023, proposes to align the service conditions and salaries of the CEC and ECs with the Cabinet Secretary. The issue is not so much about financial remuneration, but the signals that the Narendra Modi government intends to send out, when general elections are less than eight months away and a newly set up committee is examining the feasibility of the far-reaching and contentious proposal of holding simultaneous elections to state assemblies, local bodies and Parliament. By effectively demoting the ECs to the status of civil servants, the Bill limits their authority to discipline the political class, in case of violations, at a critical juncture. It is less than mindful, and respectful, of the poll monitor's delicate and difficult task – of upholding protocols and norms in a scrupulously non-partisan manner in a diverse and intensely competitive democracy.

Article 324 of the Constitution empowers the EC to be independent and bestows on it the enormous responsibility to "superintend, control and direct elections". The Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld and shored up these powers. Of course, the EC was not always the formidable referee that it is now. It came into its own in the 1990s, when the then CEC, T N Seshan, forcefully asserted its constitutional role in enforcing the rules of the game. Today the institution's well-deserved reputation for impartiality and fairness is an inextricable part of the legitimacy of India's political-electoral system. Admittedly, in recent times, the Commission has invited questions when it has not risen to its own high standards – for instance, in the alacrity with which it seemed to echo the establishment's narrative on revids and put political parties on the mat on poll promises, its prevarication over halting the election campaign in West Bengal during the brutal second wave of the Covid pandemic till the Prime Minister had made his speech, or compliance with summons issued by a PMO official for an "informal interaction". But those are aberrations in the arc of one of India's most trusted institutions.

The EC has earned national and international esteem for ensuring that the poor, marginalised and women vote freely, without fear. The new Bill errs by not recognising and acknowledging the EC's above-the-fray stature and role. The official argument that the "table of precedence" isn't changed doesn't wash. This isn't about who sits in which chair in which row at an official function, this is about protecting the commission's dignity and autonomy – critical to the health of a democracy. That's why the government should rethink.

JUDGE, NOT SECRETARY

To protect Election Commission's autonomy and dignity, ECs need to remain equivalent to SC judge, not Cabinet Secretary

The strength and resilience of institutions in a democracy derive from both legal provisions and a climate of respect and reciprocity. In a time, therefore, when the executive armed with a large mandate does not hesitate to weaponise it against political opponents and unelected institutions, the legislative move to downgrade the status of members of the Election Commission is disquieting. A Bill listed for discussion in the Special Session of Parliament proposes to do just that.

PASSAGE - 5

18-09-2023

JUDGE, NOT SECRETARY

To protect Election Commission's autonomy and dignity, ECs need to remain equivalent to SC judge, not Cabinet Secretary

THE STRENGTH AND resilience of institutions in a democracy derive from both legal provisions and a climate of respect and reciprocity. In a time, therefore, when the executive armed with a large mandate does not hesitate to weaponise it against political opponents and unelected institutions, the legislative move to downgrade the status of members of the Election Commission is disquieting. A Bill listed for discussion in the Special Session of Parliament proposes to do just that. Currently, the poll monitors are treated as equivalent to Supreme Court judges. But a clause in the Chief Election Commissioner and Other Election Commissioners (Appointment, Conditions of Service and Term of Office) Bill, 2023, proposes to align the service conditions and salaries of the CEC and ECs with the Cabinet Secretary. The issue is not so much about financial remuneration, but the signals that the Narendra Modi government intends to send out, when general elections are less than eight months away and a newly set up committee is examining the feasibility of the far-reaching and contentious proposal of holding simultaneous elections to state assemblies, local bodies and Parliament. By effectively demoting the ECs to the status of civil servants, the Bill limits their authority to discipline the political class, in case of violations, at a critical juncture. It is less than mindful, and respectful, of the poll monitor's delicate and difficult task – of upholding protocols and norms in a scrupulously non-partisan manner in a diverse and intensely competitive democracy.

Article 324 of the Constitution empowers the EC to be independent and bestows on it the enormous responsibility to "superintend, control and direct elections". The Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld and shored up these powers. Of course, the EC was not always the formidable referee that it is now. It came into its own in the 1990s, when the then CEC, T N Seshan, forcefully asserted its constitutional role in enforcing the rules of the game. Today the institution's well-deserved reputation for impartiality and fairness is an inextricable part of the legitimacy of India's political-electoral system. Admittedly, in recent times, the Commission has invited questions when it has not risen to its own high standards – for instance, in the alacrity with which it seemed to echo the establishment's narrative on revdis and put political parties on the mat on poll promises, its prevarication over halting the election campaign in West Bengal during the brutal second wave of the Covid pandemic till the Prime Minister had made his speech, or compliance with summons issued by a PMO official for an "informal interaction". But those are aberrations in the arc of one of India's most trusted institutions.

The EC has earned national and international esteem for ensuring that the poor, marginalised and women vote freely, without fear. The new Bill errs by not recognising and acknowledging the EC's above-the-fray stature and role. The official argument that the "table of precedence" isn't changed doesn't wash. This isn't about who sits in which chair in which row at an official function, this is about protecting the commission's dignity and autonomy – critical to the health of a democracy. That's why the government should rethink.

Currently, the poll monitors are treated as equivalent to Supreme Court judges. But a clause in the Chief Election Commissioner and Other Election Commissioners (Appointment, Conditions of Service and Term of Office) Bill, 2023, proposes to align the service conditions and salaries of the CEC and ECs with the Cabinet Secretary. The issue is not so much about financial remuneration, but the signals that the Narendra Modi government intends to send out, when general elections are less than eight months away and a newly set up committee is examining the feasibility of the far-reaching and contentious proposal of holding simultaneous elections to state assemblies, local bodies and Parliament.

WE EXPRESS OUR SINCERE THANKS FOR VIEWING THIS VIDEO

Presented by

Learning Space

For Suggestions:

suggestions@learningspace.in

To Contact us:

info@learningspace.in

For Information:

info.learningspacedigital@gmail.com

Visit us at:

www.learningspacedigital.com

98499 42299