

MUST FOR EVERY STUDENT ... FOR ALL COMPETITIVE EXAMS

ENGLISH MADE SIMPLE!

LEARN WITH GVR SIR

MODULE - 23

Flaw : A fault / mistake, especially one that happens while something is being planned or made.

219

Example :

Even a minor flaw is not allowed in the steel, which is used to make rails.

Flaw : A fault / mistake, especially one that happens while something is being planned or made.

219

Example :
If the Parliament makes legislations without flaws, the burden on Courts will reduce significantly.

Chronic : Something bad/disease continuing for a long time.

220

Example :
Poor quality of Education in Government schools is a chronic problem in India and this is affecting GDP growth considerably.

Chronic : Something bad / disease continuing for a long time.

220

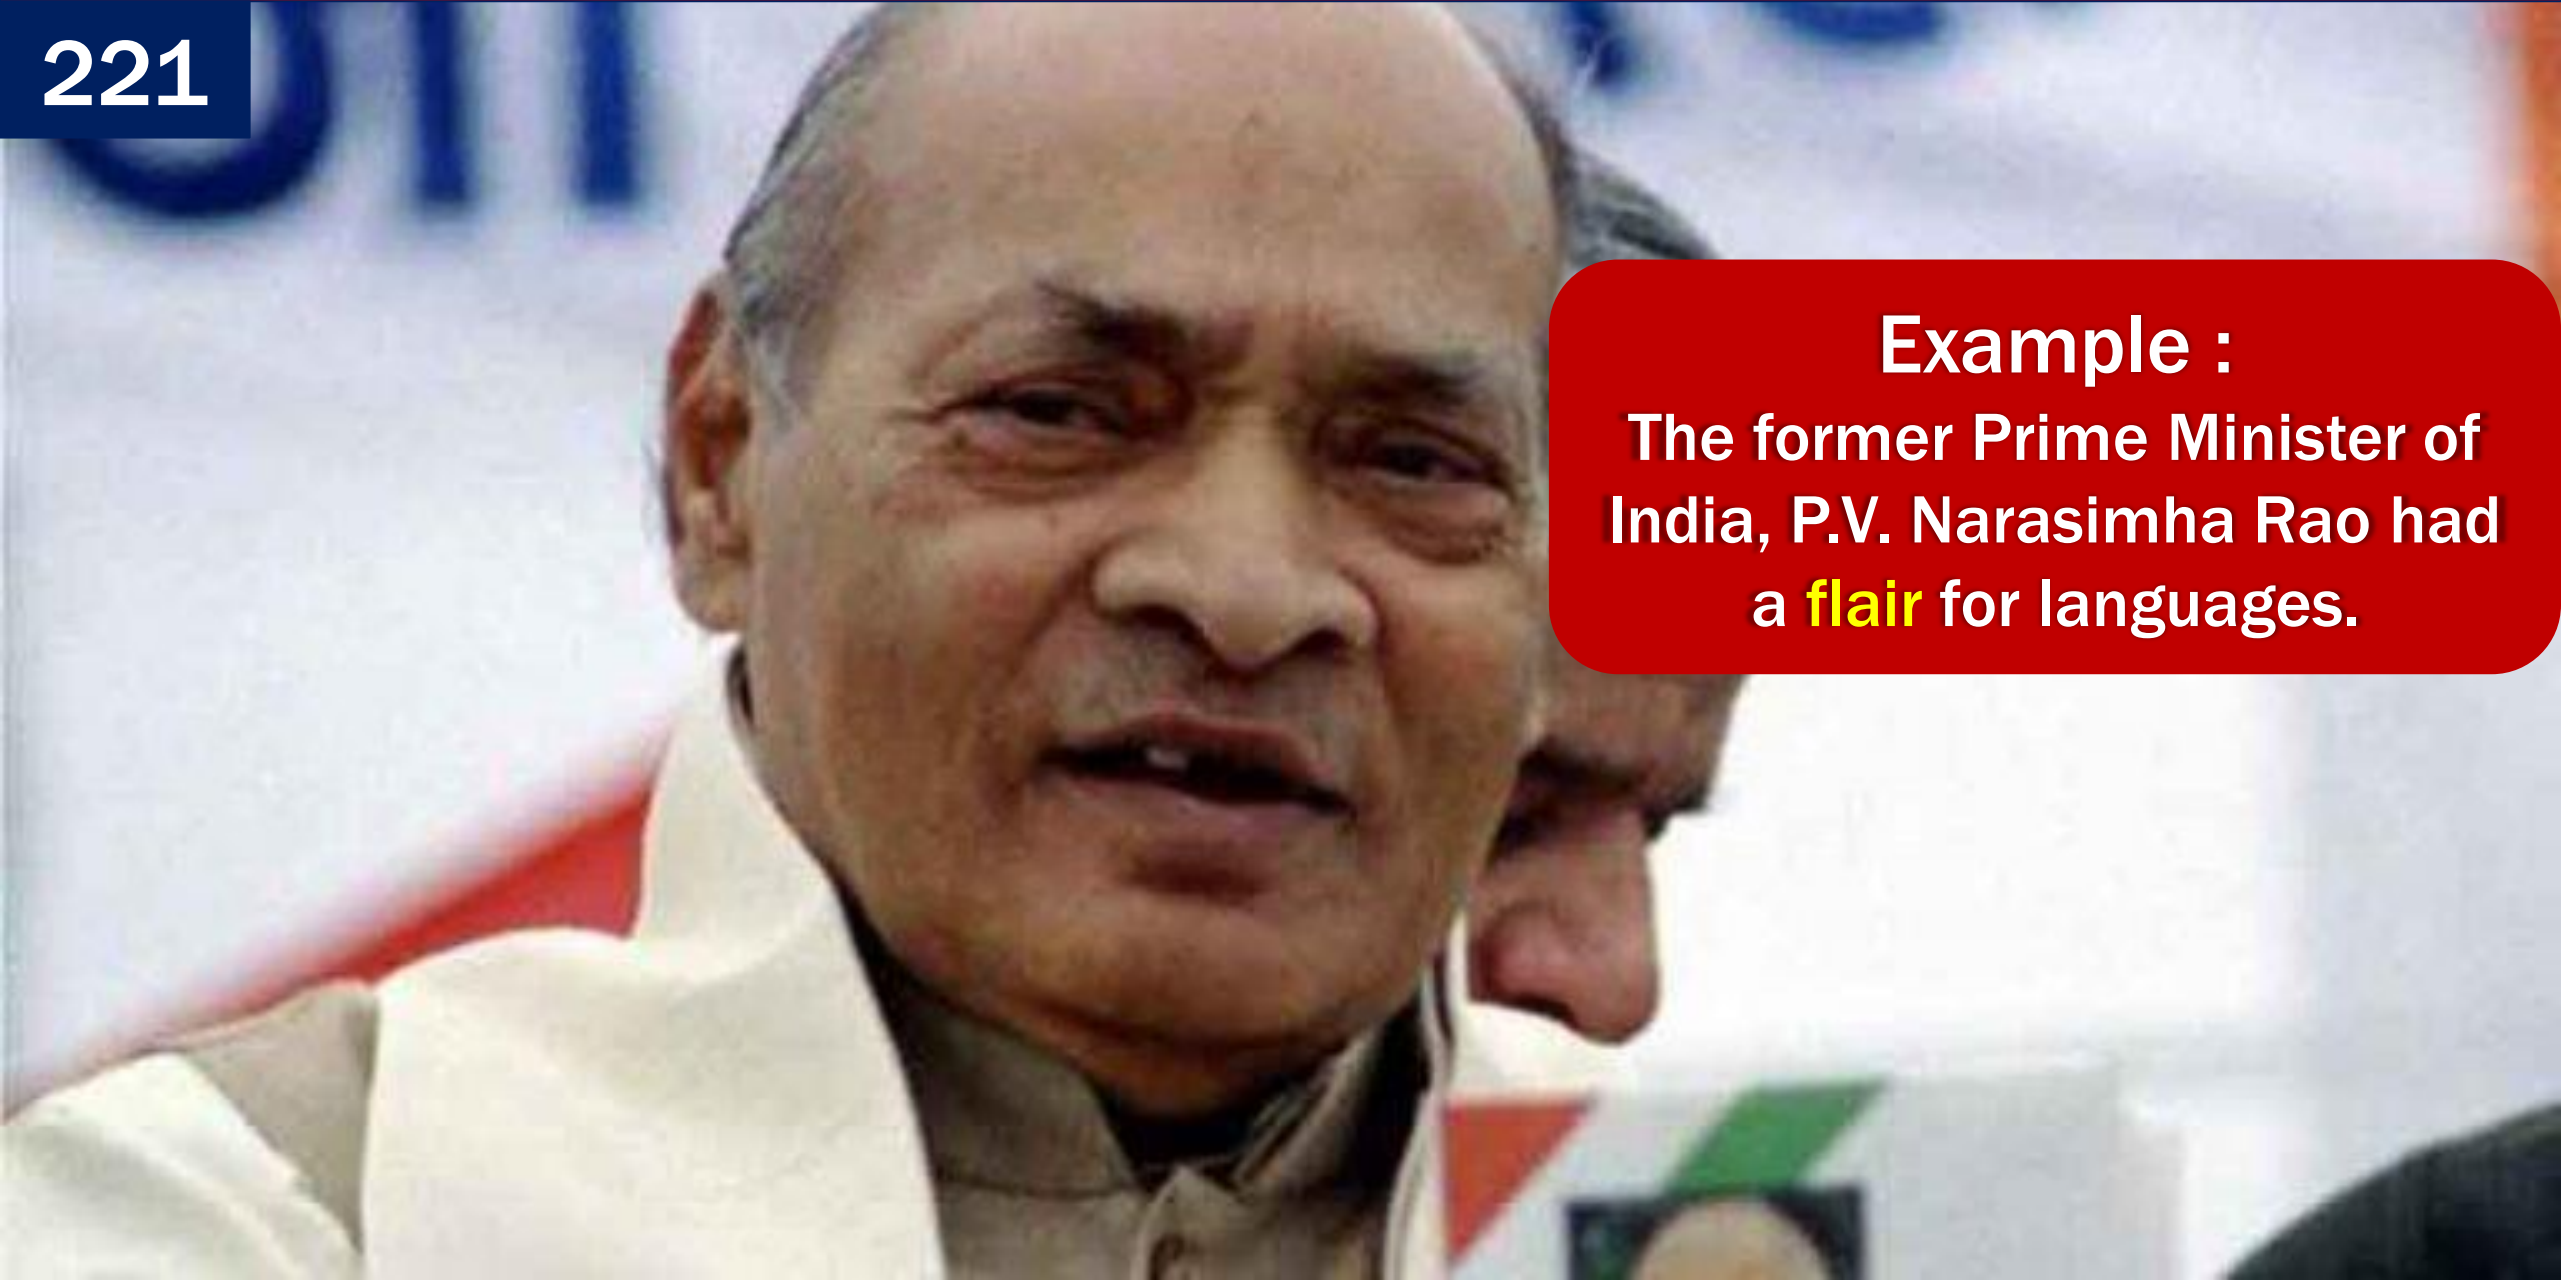

Example :

Diabetes is a chronic disease.

Flair : Natural ability to do something well.

221

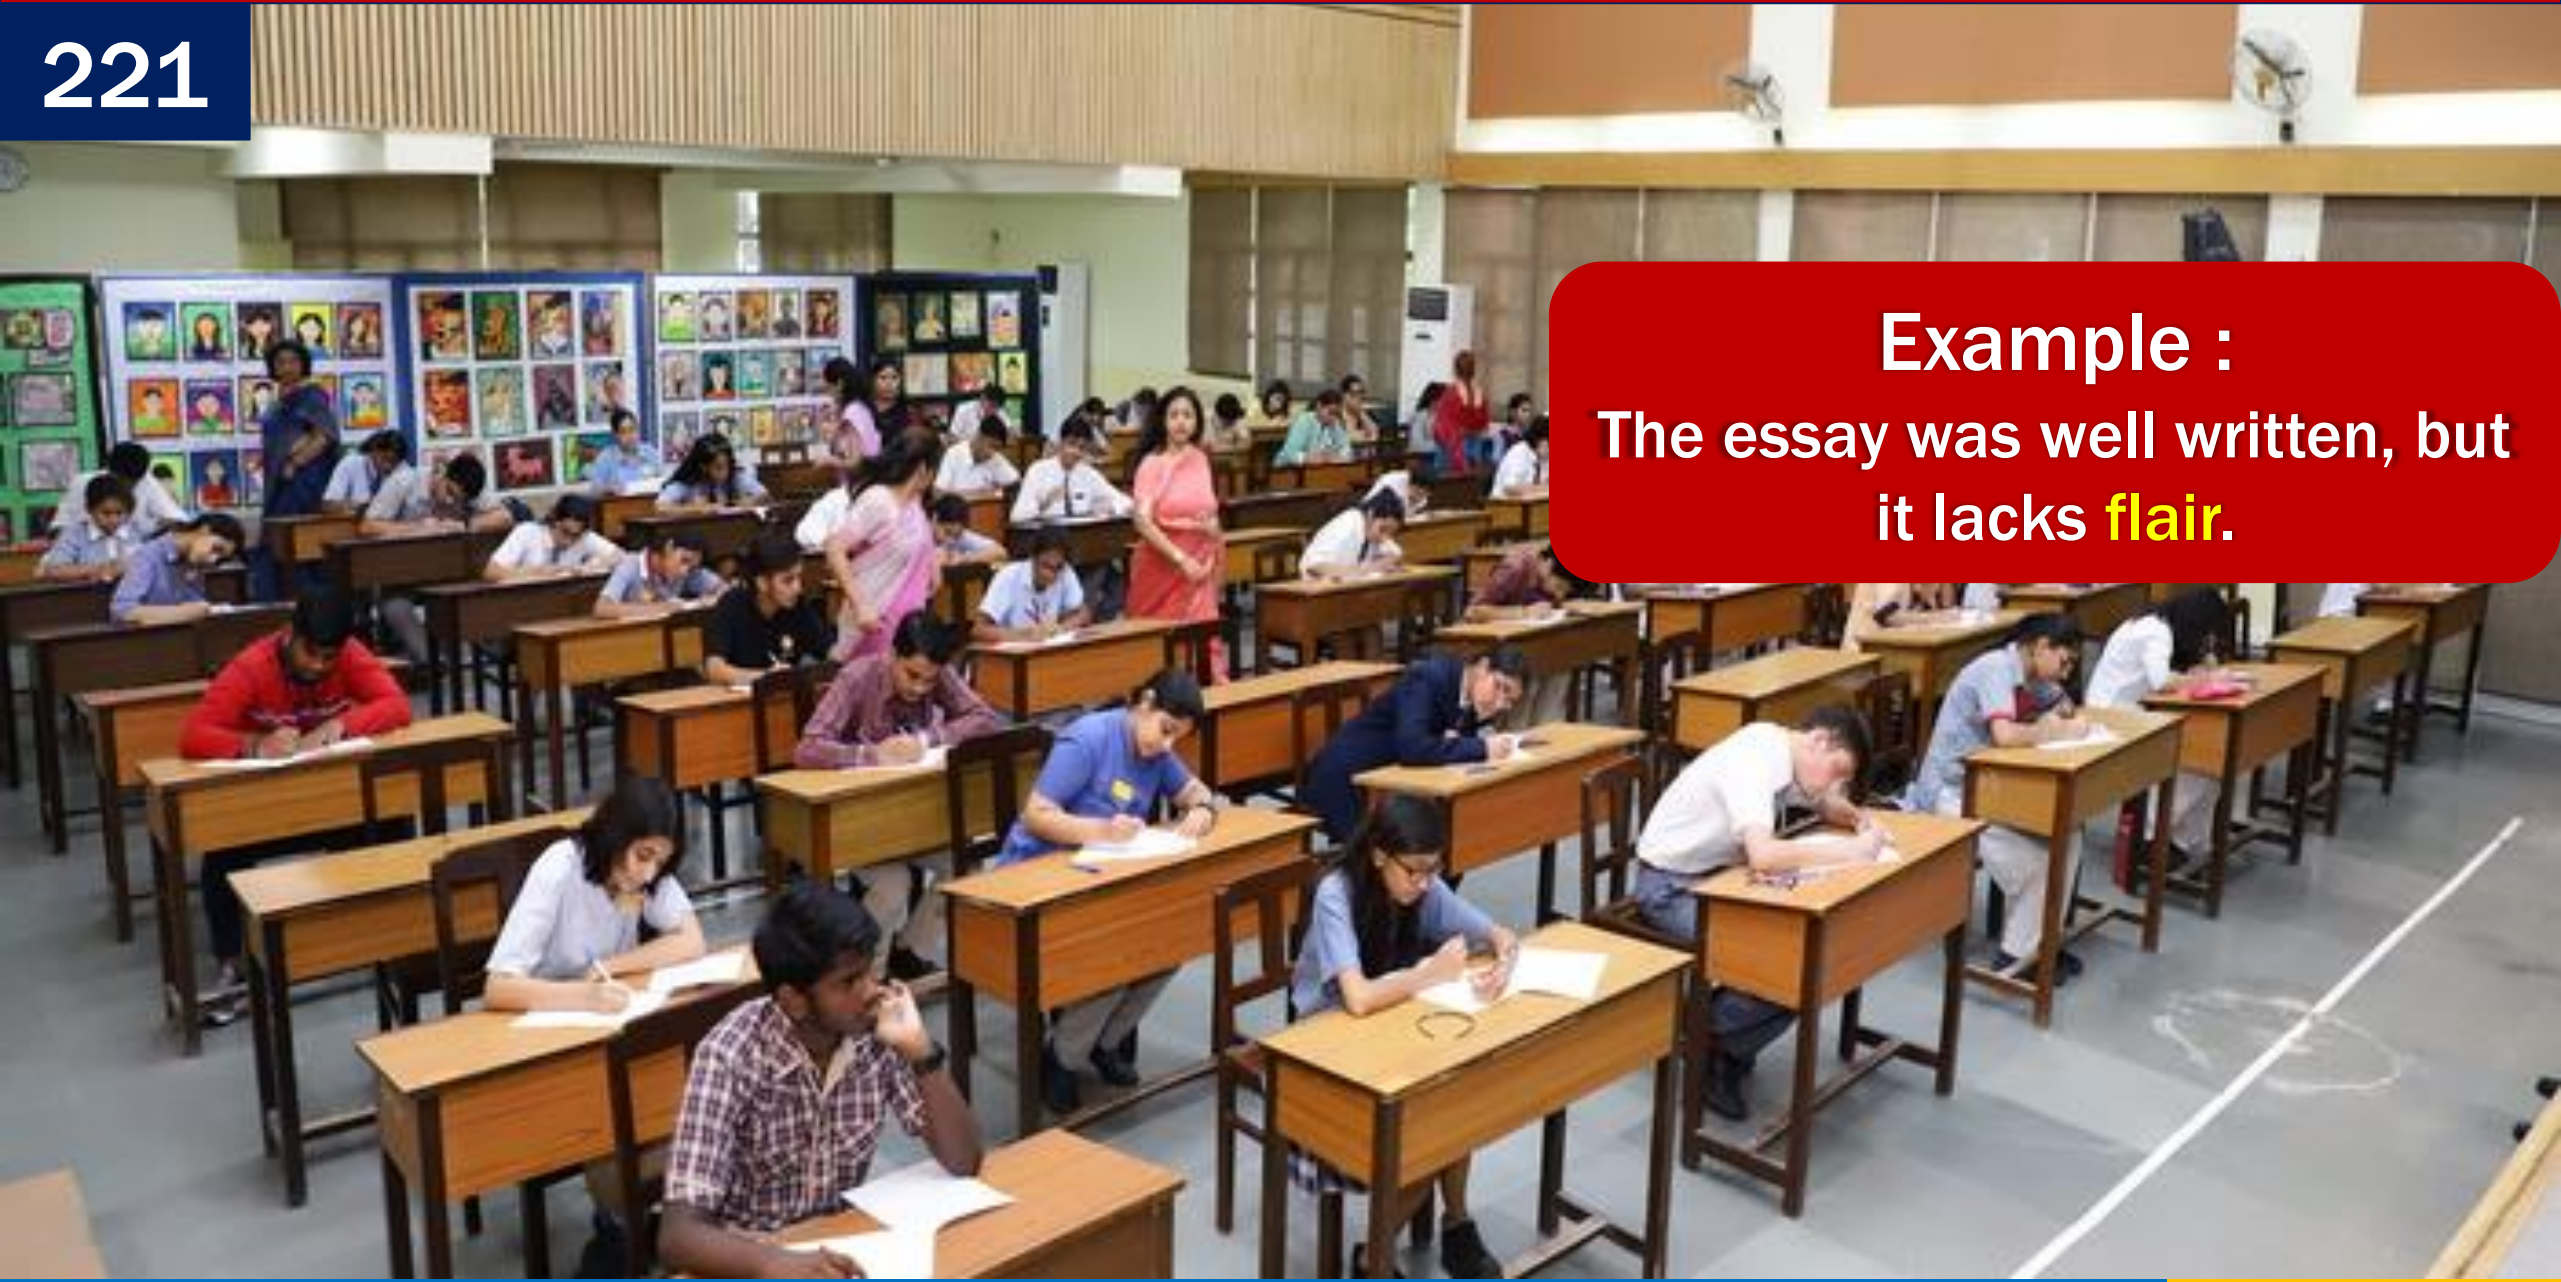

Example :

The former Prime Minister of India, P.V. Narasimha Rao had a flair for languages.

Flair : Something done in an exciting and interesting way.

221

Example :
The essay was well written, but it lacks flair.

Disseminate : To spread or give out something, especially news, information, innovative ideas etc., to a lot of people.

222

Example :
One of the aims of the World Health Organization is to disseminate information about various emerging diseases.

Symptom : Any single problem that is caused by a more serious / general problem.

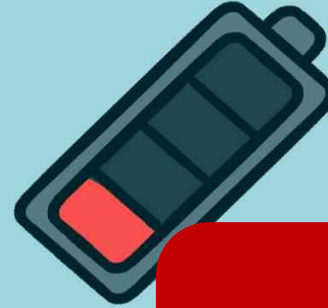

223

Increased frequency of urination

UTIs or yeast infections

Ext
exha

Example :

There are several symptoms for diabetes.

Intense hunger or thirst

Tingling or numbness in extremities

Slow-healing wounds

Symptom : Any single problem that is caused by a more serious / general problem.

223

Example :

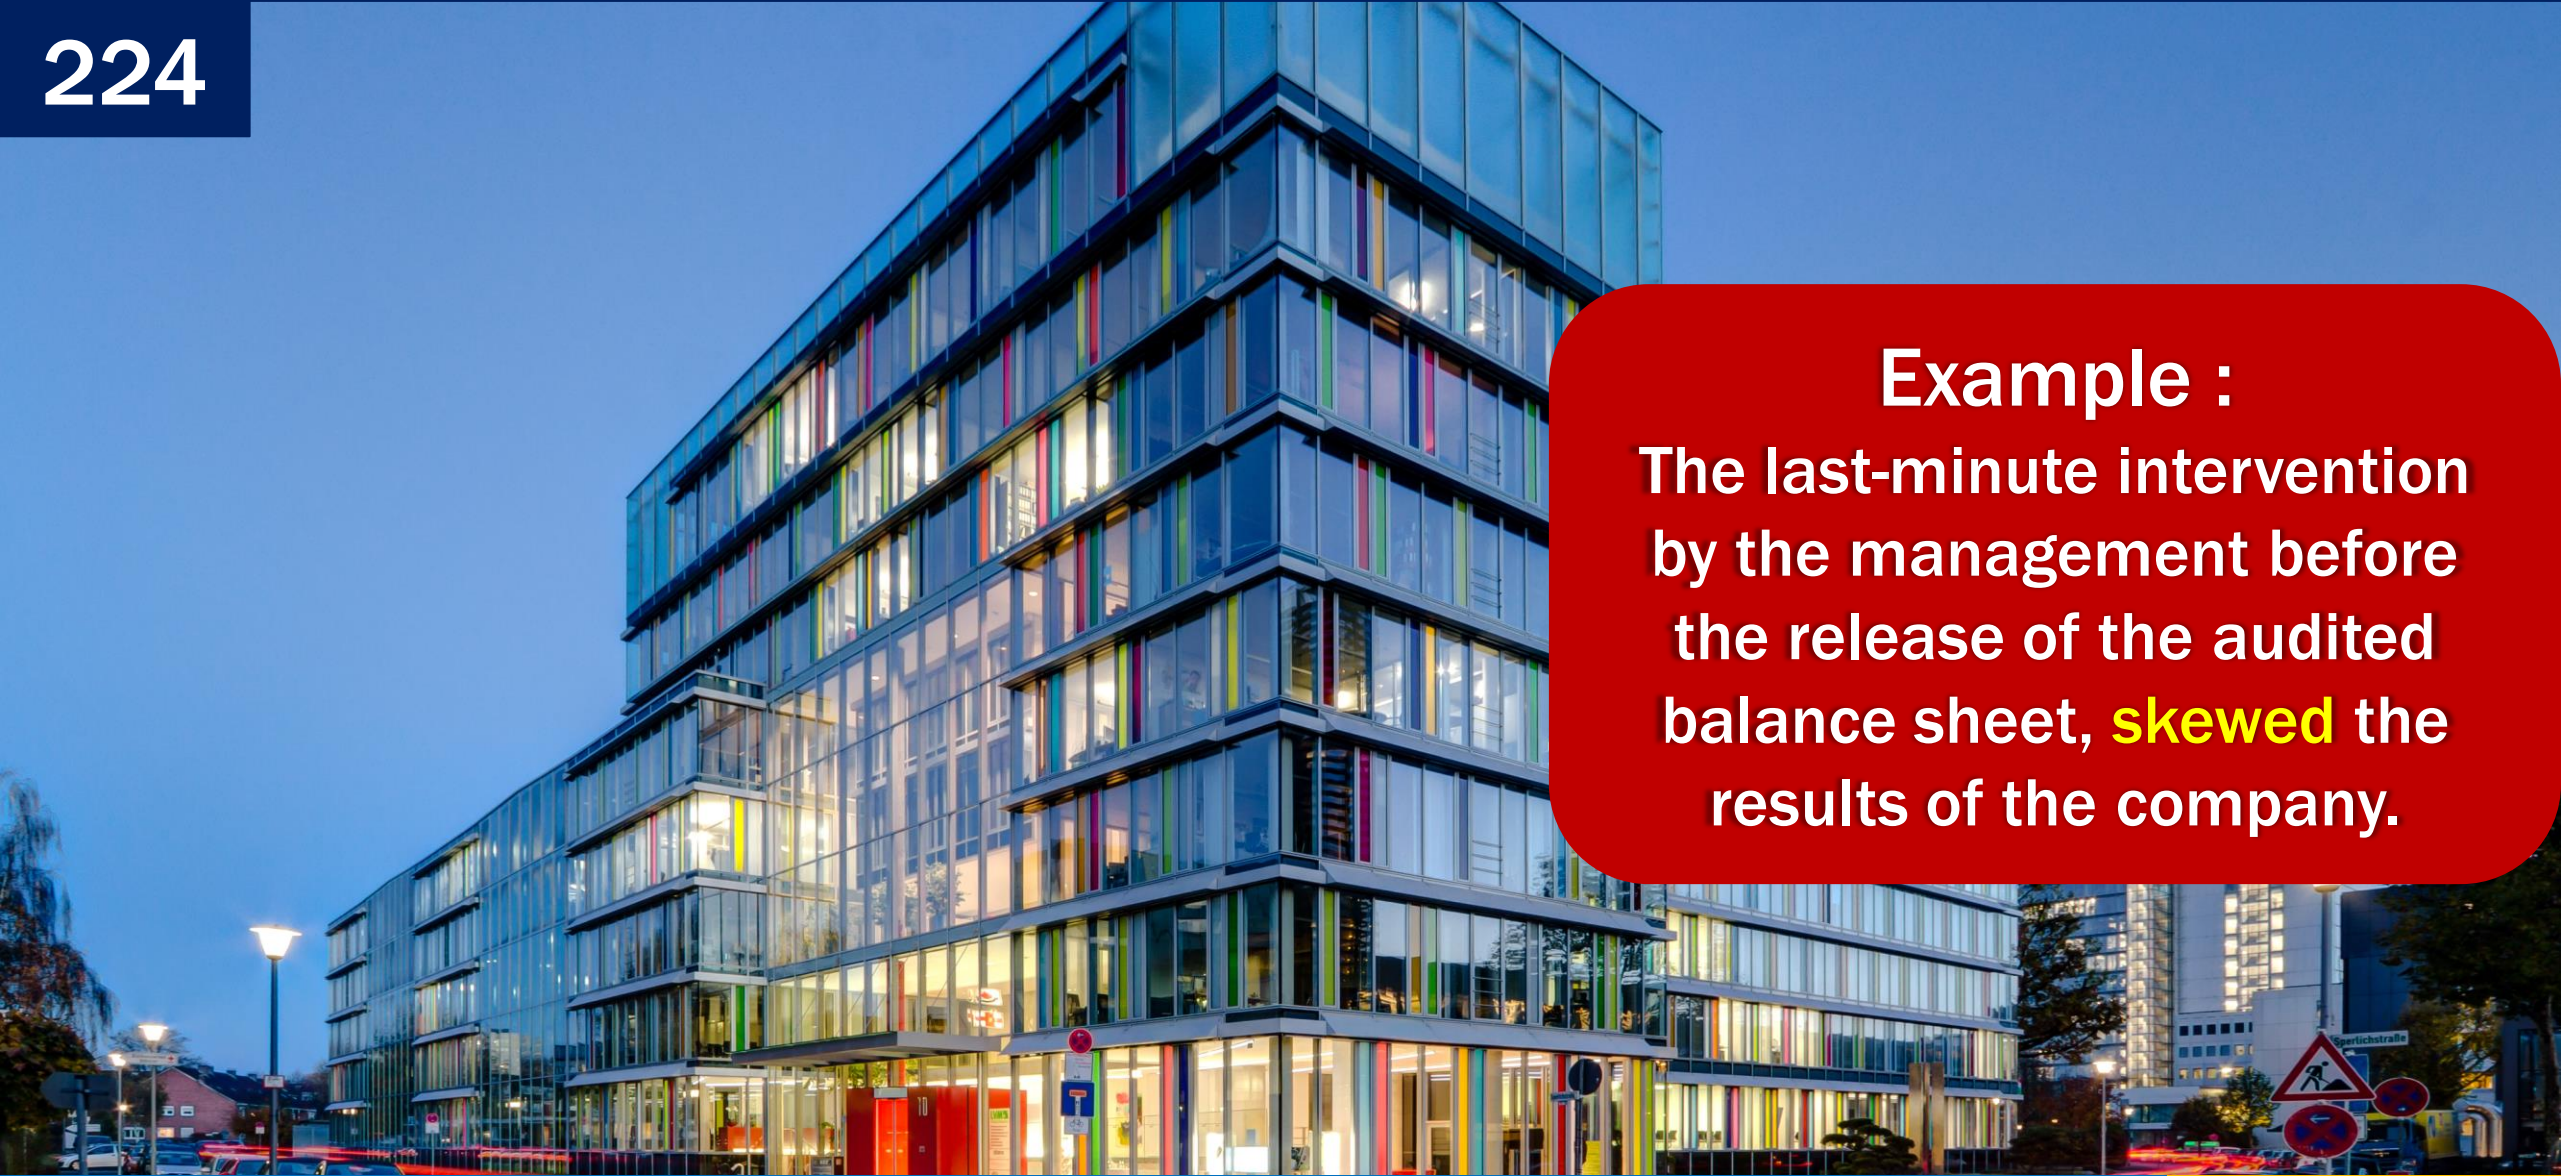

In majority of the cases, outbreak of violence is the symptom of simmering discontent against the Government.

Skew : To cause something to be not straight or exact / twist / distort.

224

Example :

The last-minute intervention by the management before the release of the audited balance sheet, skewed the results of the company.

Skew : To cause results to be changed.

224

Example :

When the interviewer asks biased questions, the original personality of the individual gets skewed.

Melissa Fach

Moz // Authority Labs

Boost : Increase / improve

225

BHIM
BHARAT INTERFACE FOR MONEY

paytm

UPI
UNIFIED PAYMENTS INTERFACE

Example :

Digitalization has given boost to the Indian economy during the previous decade in many ways.

Boost : Encourage / help

225

Example :
Uttarakhand State Government took several steps to boost tourism without considering the carrying capacity of the Himalayan ecosystem.

Patronage : The support given to an Organization by someone.

226

Example :
Normally, charity organizations cannot survive without the patronage of prominent businesses.

Patronage : The power to give someone an important assignment in exchange for help or support.

226

Example :
Political patronage is the real concern in various democracies across the World.

Notorious : Famous for something immoral / bad.

227

Example :
Several Central American Countries are notorious for drug cartels.

Notorious : Famous for something immoral/bad.

227

Example :
Mithi river, which flows through Mumbai, is notorious for its pollution levels.

Nexus : An important connection between the parts of a system or a group of things.

228

Example :
There is a nexus between poverty, population growth and the environment.

Nexus : Series of connections within a particular system / situation.

228

Example :
Drug menace in Punjab is fueled by politician-police-drug mafia nexus.

Cosy : Comfortable and pleasant, with regard to a building because it is small and warm.

229

Example :
Though the outside environment is quite chilly, the living room is warm and cosy.

Cosy : Used to describe a situation that is convenient for those involved, but may not be honest or legal.

229

Example :

There is a cosy relation between corporate hospitals, doctors, diagnostics and pharmaceutical companies.

01-11-2023

LOOK BEYOND QUOTA

Issues framed by Maratha agitation require expanding opportunities and economic pie – not increasing reservation

THE RESURGENCE OF the Maratha community's agitation for reservation – and the disturbing violent turn it has taken — frames fundamental social, political and legal challenges for the ruling coalition and Maharashtra's polity as a whole. The attacks on the homes of legislators and the vandalising of public property by the protesters only shrink the space for dialogue. It turns a vexed political issue into one that is about law and order. The hunger strike by the Maratha Kranti Morcha (MKM) leader Manoj Jarange Patil puts a clock on a resolution: However, the MKM leadership too must realise that such brinksmanship is not conducive to a durable solution. The “banning” of party leaders from certain areas and meetings does not bode well. Beyond the current moment, the Maratha agitation raises a question that has haunted many states: Are quotas the only way to address demands for development?

The Maharashtra government has gone down the reservation road before, only to come up against a legal wall. The 2018 Maharashtra State Reservation for Socially and Educationally Backward Classes (SEBC) Act, which provided the Maratha community reservation in public education and employment was struck down by a five-judge constitutional bench of the Supreme Court in 2021. First, the Court refused to breach the 50 per cent ceiling for reservation prescribed in Indra Sawhney. It also found that data collected by the Justice Gaikwad Commission to prove the “educational and economic backwardness” of the Maratha community, in fact, “proves that the Marathas are not socially and educationally backward”. The SEBC Act was a response to a long movement, which gained momentum in 2016. It provided for a separate quota for the community since their inclusion among OBCs would upturn the social applecart. The issues raised by the Court — and the delicate contours of the politics of reservation — remain as salient today.

Across states — Jats in Haryana and Patidars in Gujarat, for example — “dominant” communities are demanding reservation. While they do have significant political influence and, often wield economic power in a rural land-based economy, that has not always translated to income and educational capital. Take the Marathas. According to the Indian Human Development Survey, the poorest 40 per cent of the community got less than 13 per cent of the total income of the Marathas as of 2011-12. In the same period, only 8.1 per cent of people from the community had an undergraduate degree. Even today, there are large numbers of individuals within dominant communities who are unable to fulfil their aspirations. Reservation, however, is meant to address a lack of representation and backwardness at the community level. The way forward lies in looking beyond quotas: The economic and education pie must become larger for all Indians. Skill development in partnership with industry is a sure-fire way to raise incomes. There is also room for development and policy interventions by the state that can help the community without relying on quotas alone. But, for that to happen, the current politics of brinksmanship must give way to a good-faith dialogue.

LOOK BEYOND QUOTA

Issues framed by Maratha agitation require expanding opportunities and economic pie – not increasing reservation

The resurgence of the Maratha community's agitation for reservation – and the disturbing violent turn it has taken — frames fundamental social, political and legal challenges for the ruling coalition and Maharashtra's polity as a whole. The attacks on the homes of legislators and the vandalising of public property by the protesters only shrink the space for dialogue. It turns a vexed political issue into one that is about law and order. The hunger strike by the Maratha Kranti Morcha (MKM) leader Manoj Jarange Patil puts a clock on a resolution: However, the MKM leadership too must realise that such brinksmanship is not conducive to a durable solution. The “banning” of party leaders from certain areas and meetings does not bode well. Beyond the current moment, the Maratha agitation raises a question that has haunted many states: Are quotas the only way to address demands for development?

01-11-2023

LOOK BEYOND QUOTA

Issues framed by Maratha agitation require expanding opportunities and economic pie — not increasing reservation

THE RESURGENCE OF the Maratha community's agitation for reservation — and the disturbing violent turn it has taken — frames fundamental social, political and legal challenges for the ruling coalition and Maharashtra's polity as a whole. The attacks on the homes of legislators and the vandalising of public property by the protesters only shrink the space for dialogue. It turns a vexed political issue into one that is about law and order. The hunger strike by the Maratha Kranti Morcha (MKM) leader Manoj Jarange Patil puts a clock on a resolution: However, the MKM leadership too must realise that such brinksmanship is not conducive to a durable solution. The "banning" of party leaders from certain areas and meetings does not bode well. Beyond the current moment, the Maratha agitation raises a question that has haunted many states: Are quotas the only way to address demands for development?

The Maharashtra government has gone down the reservation road before, only to come up against a legal wall. The 2018 Maharashtra State Reservation for Socially and Educationally Backward Classes (SEBC) Act, which provided the Maratha community reservation in public education and employment was struck down by a five-judge constitutional bench of the Supreme Court in 2021. First, the Court refused to breach the 50 per cent ceiling for reservation prescribed in Indra Sawhney. It also found that data collected by the Justice Gaikwad Commission to prove the "educational and economic backwardness" of the Maratha community, in fact, "proves that the Marathas are not socially and educationally backward". The SEBC Act was a response to a long movement, which gained momentum in 2016. It provided for a separate quota for the community since their inclusion among OBCs would upturn the social applecart. The issues raised by the Court — and the delicate contours of the politics of reservation — remain as salient today.

Across states — Jats in Haryana and Patidars in Gujarat, for example — "dominant" communities are demanding reservation. While they do have significant political influence and, often wield economic power in a rural land-based economy, that has not always translated to income and educational capital. Take the Marathas. According to the Indian Human Development Survey, the poorest 40 per cent of the community got less than 13 per cent of the total income of the Marathas as of 2011-12. In the same period, only 8.1 per cent of people from the community had an undergraduate degree. Even today, there are large numbers of individuals within dominant communities who are unable to fulfil their aspirations. Reservation, however, is meant to address a lack of representation and backwardness at the community level. The way forward lies in looking beyond quotas: The economic and education pie must become larger for all Indians. Skill development in partnership with industry is a sure-fire way to raise incomes. There is also room for development and policy interventions by the state that can help the community without relying on quotas alone. But, for that to happen, the current politics of brinksmanship must give way to a good-faith dialogue.

The Maharashtra government has gone down the reservation road before, only to come up against a legal wall. The 2018 Maharashtra State Reservation for Socially and Educationally Backward Classes (SEBC) Act, which provided the Maratha community reservation in public education and employment was struck down by a five-judge constitutional bench of the Supreme Court in 2021. First, the Court refused to breach the 50 per cent ceiling for reservation prescribed in Indra Sawhney. It also found that data collected by the Justice Gaikwad Commission to prove the "educational and economic backwardness" of the Maratha community, in fact, "proves that the Marathas are not socially and educationally backward".

WE EXPRESS OUR SINCERE THANKS FOR VIEWING THIS VIDEO

Presented by

Learning Space

For Suggestions:

suggestions@learningspace.in

To Contact us:

info@learningspace.in

For Information:

info.learningspacedigital@gmail.com

Visit us at:

www.learningspacedigital.com

98499 42299