HUMAN VALUES

MODULE - 11

ROLE OF FAMILY AND SOCIETY

Strong bonding between the parents and children determines the personality of child.

Humans are an integral part of a society and it cannot function without family, a universal social institution.

The value system practised in the family greatly influences young family members of the household.

Family as a social institution has an influential and paramount role in value learning. The basis for the child's attitude towards people and society is set at home.

Family lays the foundation and furthers the value inculcation in the child and supports the aspirations and good values of the child.

Values are built on the foundation of the family.

It is the actions of the family members rather than their words that help children learn values.

Mother is the first person anyone comes into contact with and she plays the role of the first teacher of the child.

From mother, a child learns values such as patience, kindness, selflessness, diligence, braveness, loyalty, honesty, commitment etc.,

Father is normally the second teacher of a child and children usually idolize their father.

A child learns values such as commitment, responsibility, planning practicality etc., from his/her father.

ROLE OF FAMILY

Children learn by imitating their parents and close family members.

Children also learn from the teachings of or by observation of their grandparents. The values they imbibe are: independence, charity, kindness, justice, love and happiness etc.,

The presence of elders in a joint family helps in social and moral development of the children, and aids the young generation to develop human values and eliminate their negative mental tendencies when they are among elders.

The values learnt by the children in joint families are: sharing, caring, sacrifice, team spirit, socialisation, familial support etc.,

ROLE OF FAMILY

Irrespective of the society, culture and the times, family plays a great role in the inculcation of values in children.

Children in the nuclear families grow up to value parental love, freedom of choice and expression, independence, liberty and financial status.

Whether a joint or a nuclear family, what matters the most is the stability of the family and the values practised and taught by the family members.

Friendly and supportive atmosphere and harmony in the family translates into love, affection, tolerance, emotional stability and generosity.

The eternal values of truth, right Conduct, peace, love and non-violence are transmitted on first through the family.

Children identify themselves with their parents, other family members and look up to them as their role models for imitation and emulation.

The behavioural problems of the children are corrected early by the family members, leading to the course correction by the children.

The family has the greatest responsibility in passing on the values to the next generation, and it is the most important source of values in the life of a human being.

Man owes his strength in the struggle for existence to the fact that he is a social animal.

— Albert Einstein —

Man (a human being) is a social animal and society preserves the culture and passes on to succeeding generations.

Society comes next, after the family, on the learning ladder for children, and it shapes our beliefs, attitudes, values and morals.

Society inculcates values through the various interactions and tools it provides to an individual. The society can have both a beneficial and harmful effect on the value inculcation in the children.

The role of society is very important in the social development of a child and presents with opportunities to take up social roles and responsibilities and thus equipping the child to take moral decisions based on inculcated values.

Indian society believes in vasudhaiva kutumbakam or 'the whole world is one family'

India is a pluralistic and multi-cultural society where many faiths and belief systems regulate the life of individuals. India, though predominantly Hindu, is not a Hindu society and is a blend of various religious thoughts.

Many religious traditions, both indigenous and foreign such as Buddhism, Sikhism, Bhakti cult, Sufi tradition as well as Islam and Christianity have been established over the years.

Many religious gurus, law-givers, social reformers and statesmen have come to guide and influence the life and culture of Indians, shaping our value system.

"Vasudhaiva kutumbakam" illustrates the values of openness and inclusiveness

Dharma:	Righteousness, Duty
Artha:	Wealth
Kama:	Desire
Moksha:	Liberation

The Mahabharata, the Ramayana, the Bhagvat Gita as well as the Quran, the Bible, the Guru Granth Sahib, etc., have moulded the thinking pattern and value consciousness of Indian society.

India is not only the birthplace of spirituality and popular religions like Hinduism, Buddhism and Jainism, but has even embraced the ideologies of Islam and Christianity with tolerance and flexibility, which speaks volumes about Indian religious pluralism.

The Hindu caste system and the joint family pattern have a decisive influence on the followers of other religions too.

Nishkama karma is taught in the Bhagavad Gita

Another dictum of the Gita which has taken deep roots in the Indian society is Karmanyē vadhikā raste mā phaleshu kāda chana meaning 'one must go on performing one's duties without being worried about the rewards or the results'.

As Indians, we should be aware of the universalism of our culture and learn the values from it.

Most of the values have been passed on from generation to generation and we should strive to do the same.

History, both ancient and modern shapes the culture and the values of a society, and ours is no different.

Nishkama karma stresses on the value of duty

The deterioration in the values gradually set in our culture for a long time and is slowly being reversed.

But, negative influences also crept in as reflected in the values practised currently by our society. For example, cleanliness was not a highly perceived value and the notion started to change after Swachh Bharat Abhiyan.

Lack of self-discipline in civic matters is one such issue that has been passed down the generations for a long time, but fortunately this practice is beginning to witness a change.

Dishonesty or accepting and offering bribes is another malaise that is finally recognised as a negative value.
