REBELLIONS

Jahangir's rule witnessed a spate of rebellions

2 PRINCE KHURRAM'S REVOLT

- Problems arose when Noor Jahan married her daughter Ladli Begum (by Sher Afghani) to Jahangir's youngest son Shahryar, and now she supported him as the heir apparent. So this drove Khurram (Shah Jahan) into rebellion against his father in 1622 AD, since he felt that Jahangir was completely under Nur Jahan's influence.
- Jahangir had ordered Shah Jahan to go to Qandahar, which was besieged by the Persians but Shah Jahan was afraid that the campaign would be a long and difficult one and intrigues would be hatched against him during his absence from the court. Hence he was always delaying the assignment and his focus was on the throne.
- This rebellion kept the empire distracted for four years, i.e., till 1626 AD and resulted in
 - The loss of Qandahar
 - Emboldened the Deccanis to recover all the territories surrendered to the Mughals.

MUGHAL EXPANSION UNDER JAHANGIR

- 1 In 1615 AD, Amar Singh of Mewar (son of Maharana Pratap) submitted before him. Rana's son Karan Singh was made Mansabdar in the Mughal court.
- 2 In 1616 AD, with the help of Maratha sardars, Khan-i-Khanan inflicted a crushing defeat on the combined forces of Ahmadnagar, Bijapur, and Golconda.
- 3 In 1620 AD, Jahangir annexed Kangra. He was the first Muslim ruler to do so.

DECCAN EXPEDITION

Jahangir decided to follow Akbar's expansionist policy in the Deccan. But Jahangir could achieve little success in it due to certain problems:

- a) He could not devote much attention in the crucial phase due to Khurram's revolt.
- b) Rise of Malik Ambar in Deccan: Malik Ambar, with the help of Marathas and the ruler of Bijapur Ibrahim Adil Shah, made it difficult for the Mughals to consolidate their position in Berar, Ahmadnagar, and Balaghat.
