SHAH JAHAN (1628 AD- 1658 AD)

INTRODUCTION

ISSUES IN DECCAN PART

- 4
- Khan Jahan Lodhi, with the intention of securing help in times of necessity, gave away Balaghat to the Nizam Shah, to which Shah Jahan objected and ordered Khan Jahan Lodi to recover it.
 - As Khan Jahan Lodi failed to do so, Shah Jahan recalled him to court.
 - Khan Jahan, however, turned hostile and took shelter with Nizam Shah. This infuriated Shah Jahan and he decided to follow an aggressive policy to recover the lost territories of the Deccan.

SHAH JAHAN (1628 AD- 1658 AD)

SHAH JAHAN'S STRATEGY TOWARDS DECCAN

- 1 Ascertaining the fact that there could be no peace for the Mughals in the Deccan as long as Ahmadnagar continued as an independent state, he successfully isolated Ahmadnagar by winning over Bijapur and the Marathas.
- 2 Mahabat Khan was then appointed governor of Deccan. But the conflict with Deccan states continued.
- 3 Finally in 1636 AD, treaties were signed with Bijapur and Golconda.

SHAH JAHAN'S STRATEGY TOWARDS DECCAN

TREATY WITH BIJAPUR

- 1 The main points of agreement with Bijapur were:
 - Adil Shah accepted the Mughal suzerainty
 - He was to pay 20 lakh rupees as indemnity
 - He was not to interfere in the affairs of Golconda.
 - Mughal emperor was to arbitrate in case of any future dispute between Bijapur and Golconda
 - Adil Shah was to help Mughals in conflict against Shahji Bhonsle (father of Shivaji)
 - In return for these, agreed upon territory belonging to Ahmadnagar was ceded to Bijapur by Shah Jahan.

SHAH JAHAN'S STRATEGY TOWARDS DECCAN

TREATY WITH GOLCONDA

- 1 Shah Jahan completed the settlement of the Deccan by entering into a treaty with Golconda as well. According to this treaty:
 - Golconda took oath of loyalty towards Mughal emperor. Golconda agreed to include the name of the Mughal emperor in the Khutba
 - Golconda agreed to pay an agreed amount in tribute every year to the Mughals.
- 2 These treaties ended the conflicts in the Deccan. The Mughals could have large parts of Southern India under their domination, and peace with the Mughals enabled the Deccani states to expand their territories towards the south.

SHAH JAHAN'S STRATEGY TOWARDS DECCAN

NOTE

- 1 In 1656 AD, following the death of Muhammad Adil Shah, a distinct change came in Mughal policy and the treaties were ignored.
- 2 Mughals felt that these states had made extensive conquests in Karnataka and that "compensation" was due to the Mughals on the ground that the two states were Mughal vassals, and their conquests had been made possible due to the benevolent neutrality on the part of the Mughals.
- 3 Now, Shah Jahan asked his son Aurangzeb to conquer and annex the territories of Deccan kingdoms. However, this did not benefit the Mughal empire in any substantial way, in fact it created more problems for future.

SHAH JAHAN'S FAILED QANDHARA EXPEDITION

- 1 In 1639 AD, Shah Jahan secured Qandahara and immediately fortified it, but Persia were able to capture Qandahara from Mughals.
- 2 In 1649 AD Shah Jahan launched a prolonged campaign in the North-West Frontier to recover Qandahara and other ancestral lands, but all the campaigns failed.
- 3 Gradually Shah Jahan realised the futility of his ambition and stopped fighting.

Thus, there was the permanent loss of Qandahara.
