HISTORY OF SINDH- RISE OF TALPURAS AMIRS

Sovereignty of Sindh was transferred to the Talpuras.

- 1 Sindh was ruled by the Kallora chiefs
- 2 In 1770s, a Baluch tribe called Talpuras, descended from the hills and settled in the plains of Sindh.
- 3 They were excellent soldiers as well as adapted to hard life.
- 4 In 1783, the Talpuras, under leadership of Mir Fatah Ali Khan, sent the Kallora prince into exile and established complete hold over Sindh.

ANGLO-SINDH RELATIONS

Farman issued by the Mughal Emperor in 1630 authorized English to trade in the Sindh region.

The Farman provided the English with such privileges in the ports of Sindh which they enjoyed elsewhere.

For the first time company entered Sindh in 1775 and setup the first factory at Thatta.

Early 19th century, the English started to show an interest in Sindh as British wanted to create a buffer state between Russia and British India.

As there was threat, due to Rise of Napoleon in France and its alliance with Russia, to invade India from North west passes.

CONQUEST OF SINDH

GRADUAL ANNEXATION OF SINDH

The English aimed at occupying Afghanistan to check Russian expansion. But after the disastrous first Afghan War (1842) the English decided to conquer Sindh first because without controlling it they could not use the soil of Sindh for controlling Afghanistan.

SINDH'S DISCONTENTMENT

- First Anglo-Afghan war(1839-1842) fought on Sindh soil.
- British troops were stationed in their kingdom and also asked to pay for that.
- Sindh were not thanked or rewarded for their service.
- Sindh was charged with hostility or disaffection against British Government

After Afghan war, when British wanted to negotiate new treaty with Sindh. The terms were not liked by Amir. So he revolted.

SINDH'S ANNEXATION

- Compensate Afghan loss-
 - British wanted to make up the Afghan losses so wanted to annex Sindh
- Fear of Russian invasion-
 - Internal crisis in Sindh which could be easily fallen for Russian invasion
 - Captured Sindh to strengthen Afghan-Sindh border.
- Myth of English Invincibility was broken with the defeat of British in Afghan wars so they wanted to restore it by annexing Sindh.

During the time of Governor General Ellenborough, in Battle of Miani (1843), engagement between a British force under Sir Charles Napier and Amirs of Sindh resulted in a British victory and subsequent annexation of Sindh.

CONQUEST OF PUNJAB

The end of the first Anglo-Sikh War forced the Sikhs to sign a humiliating treaty in 1846

TREATY OF LAHORE

- 1 War indemnity of more than 1 crore of rupees was to be given to the English.
- 2 Jalandhar Doab (between Beas and Sutlej) was annexed to the Company's dominions. Sikhs lost Jammu, Kashmir, Hazara and some territories in Jalandhar Doab.
- 3 A British resident was to be established at Lahore under Henry Lawrence (after him Frederick Currie was appointed).
- 4 Strength of the Sikh army was reduced.

TREATY OF BHAIROWAL

Sikhs were not satisfied with the Treaty of Lahore over the issue of Kashmir, so they rebelled.

In December, 1846, the Treaty of Bhairowal was signed.

According to the provisions of this treaty, Rani Jind was removed as regent and a council of regency for Punjab was set up.

THEORY

HISTORY OF PUNJAB

After the murder of the last Sikh guru, Guru Govind Singh, a section of Sikhs under the leadership of Banda Bahadur revolted against the Mughals.

It was Maharaja Ranjit Singh (Sukarchakiya misl) who consolidated the Sikh Misals and laid the foundation of Sikh Empire in 1809.

In 1715, Banda Bahadur was defeated by Farrukhsiyar and put to death in 1716. Thus the Sikh polity, once again, became leaderless

The Misals were not a consolidated power. There were 12 important *misl*s varied in size, power as well as importance. The Misaldars often used to fight with each other.

Many Sikh sardars became owners of large parts of land which they called Misals. The lords or leaders of these Misals were called Misaldars.

The Misaldars were very strong, each of them with great military skills.

THEORY

HISTORY OF PUNJAB

RANJIT SINGH AND THE ENGLISH

Lord Minto, the then Governor General sent Charles Metcalfe as envoy to the Sikh court of Maharaja Ranjit Singh at Lahore.

British Government signed the treaty of "Mutual Friendship", which is also called Minto-Metcalfe Treaty with Maharaja Ranjit Singh on 30 May 1809.

Ranjit Singh died in June 1839 and with his death the process of the decline of his empire began.

Intention of British behind this treaty:-

1. British fear of attack from Napoleon or Russia from the Northern frontiers of the British Empire in India.
2. For strategic and diplomatic reasons, Lord Minto concluded a treaty with Ranjit Singh in order to check Sikh advance beyond Sutlej. By this treaty, the Sutlej was fixed as the boundry between the British East India Company and Ranjit Singh and they became friends.

CONQUEST OF PUNJAB

SECOND ANGLO-SIKH WAR (1848-49)

After Sir Henry Lawrence, Sir Frederick Currie was appointed at the Lahore Darbar to control the policies

Sir Frederick Currie asked Governor of Multan, Diwan Mulraj to pay arrears of the taxes.

When the British officers were sent at the Mulraj's fortress, he revolted, attacked and wounded them. This triggered war.

LORD DALHOUSIE
(1848-1856)

Rani Jind Kaur was imprisoned and the 11 year old Maharaja Duleep Singh was sent to London to retire on pension

The war prolonged for months and Sikhs were defeated. The whole of Punjab was annexed on 29 March 1849 under then Governor General Lord Dalhousie.

CONQUEST OF PUNJAB

SECOND ANGLO-SIKH WAR (1848-49)

END OF THE WAR

- Surrender of the Sikh army
- Annexation of Punjab
- Setting up of a three-member board to govern Punjab.

- In 1853 board was nullified and Punjab was placed under a chief commissioner.
- John Lawrence became the first chief commissioner.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE WAR

- Both the sides gave mutual respect to each other's fighting prowess.
- Sikhs fought loyally on the British side in the Revolt of 1857 and in many other campaigns and wars until Indian independence in 1947.
