MODERN HISTORY DISCOVERY OF INDIA

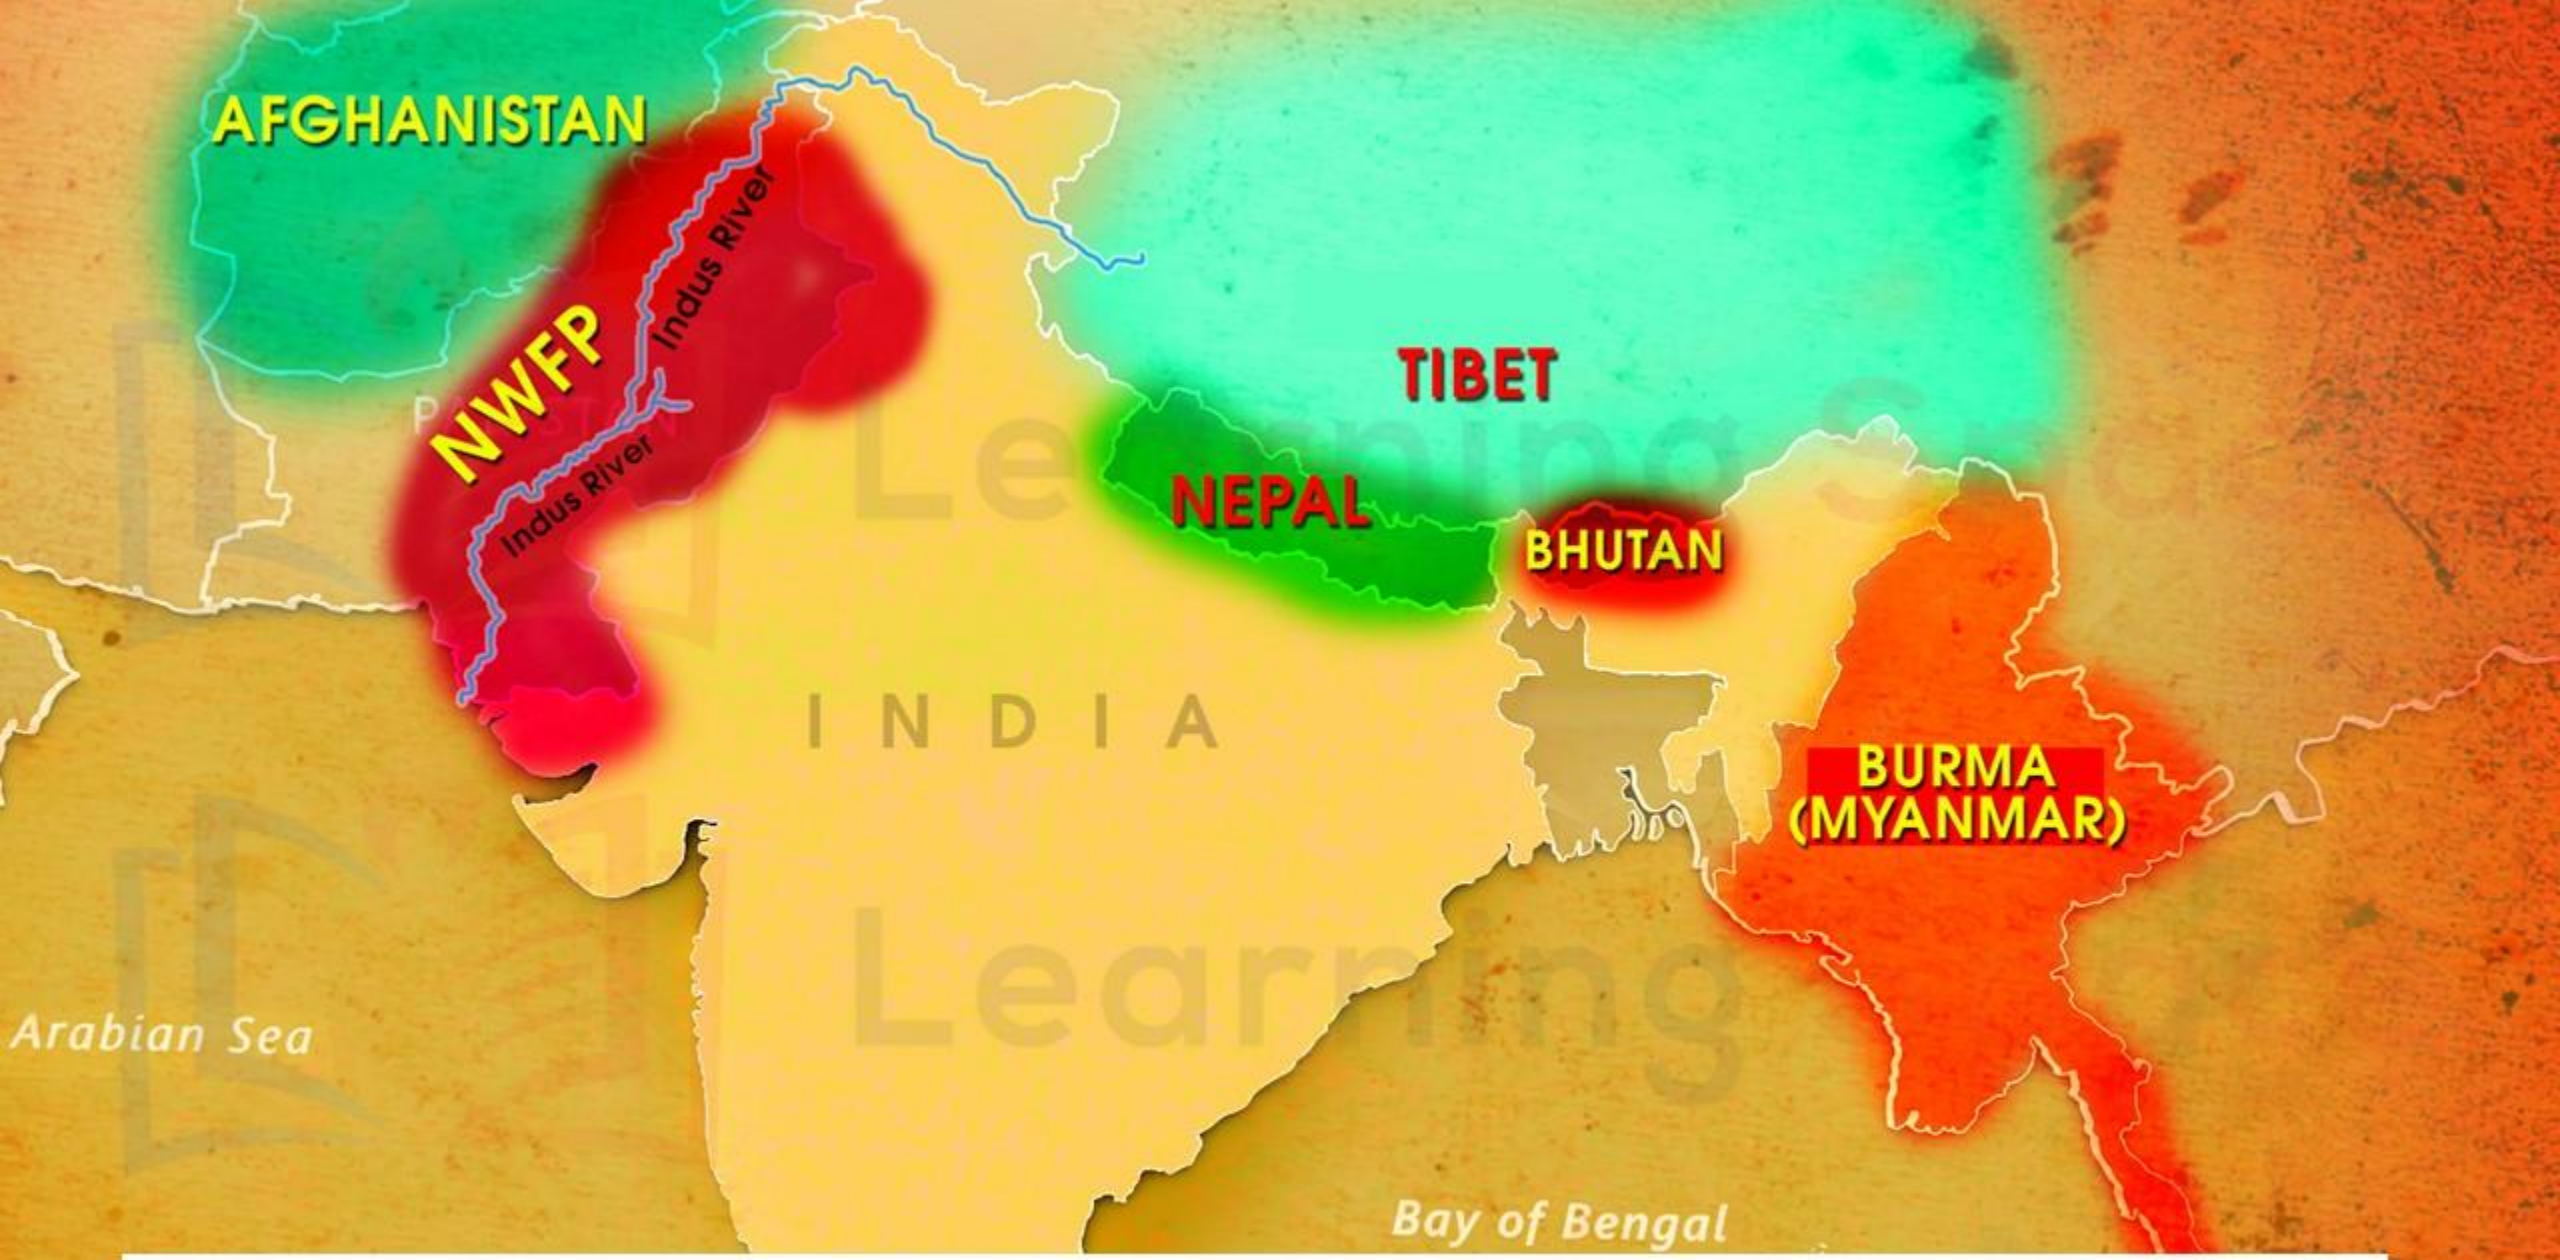

BRITISH FOREIGN POLICY IN INDIA

BRITISH FOREIGN POLICY WAS GUIDED BY THREE FACTORS

POLICY OF IMPERIALISM
or ideology of extending a nation's rule over foreign nations, often by military force or by gaining political and economic control of other areas.

POLICY OF PROTECTING TERRITORIAL AND COMMERCIAL INTEREST- this is the prime motive of the British

ARMS LENGTH PRINCIPLE
to keep other European powers at arm's length whose colonial interest come in conflict with British

The desire of the British imperialists to consolidate their administrative and political power in the region led them into conflict with countries neighboring India.

It is the policy of defending their neighbors' frontiers for safeguarding companies own territories.

Warren Hasting used it against Marathas and Mysore.

REASON FOR MAKING AWADH AS BUFFER STATE

The defense of Awadh constituted the defense of Bengal during that time. Thus the states brought under the Ring-Fence system these allies were required to maintain subsidiary forces which were to be organized, equipped and commanded by the officers of the Company who, in turn, were to be paid by the rulers of these states.

SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

Wellesley's policy of subsidiary alliance was, in fact, an extension of the ring-fence system which sought to reduce the Indian states into a position of dependence on the British government.

Wellesley converted the British empire in India to British empire of India.

- Would defend the ruler from all kinds of threats and enemies
- Adopt a policy of noninterference in the internal affairs of the state .

NATIVE STATES

Forced to accept permanent stationing of a British force within his territory and to pay a subsidy for its maintenance

To agree posting of a British resident in his court.

Native states could not employ any European in his service without the prior approval of the British

Without consulting the governor-general, native state cannot

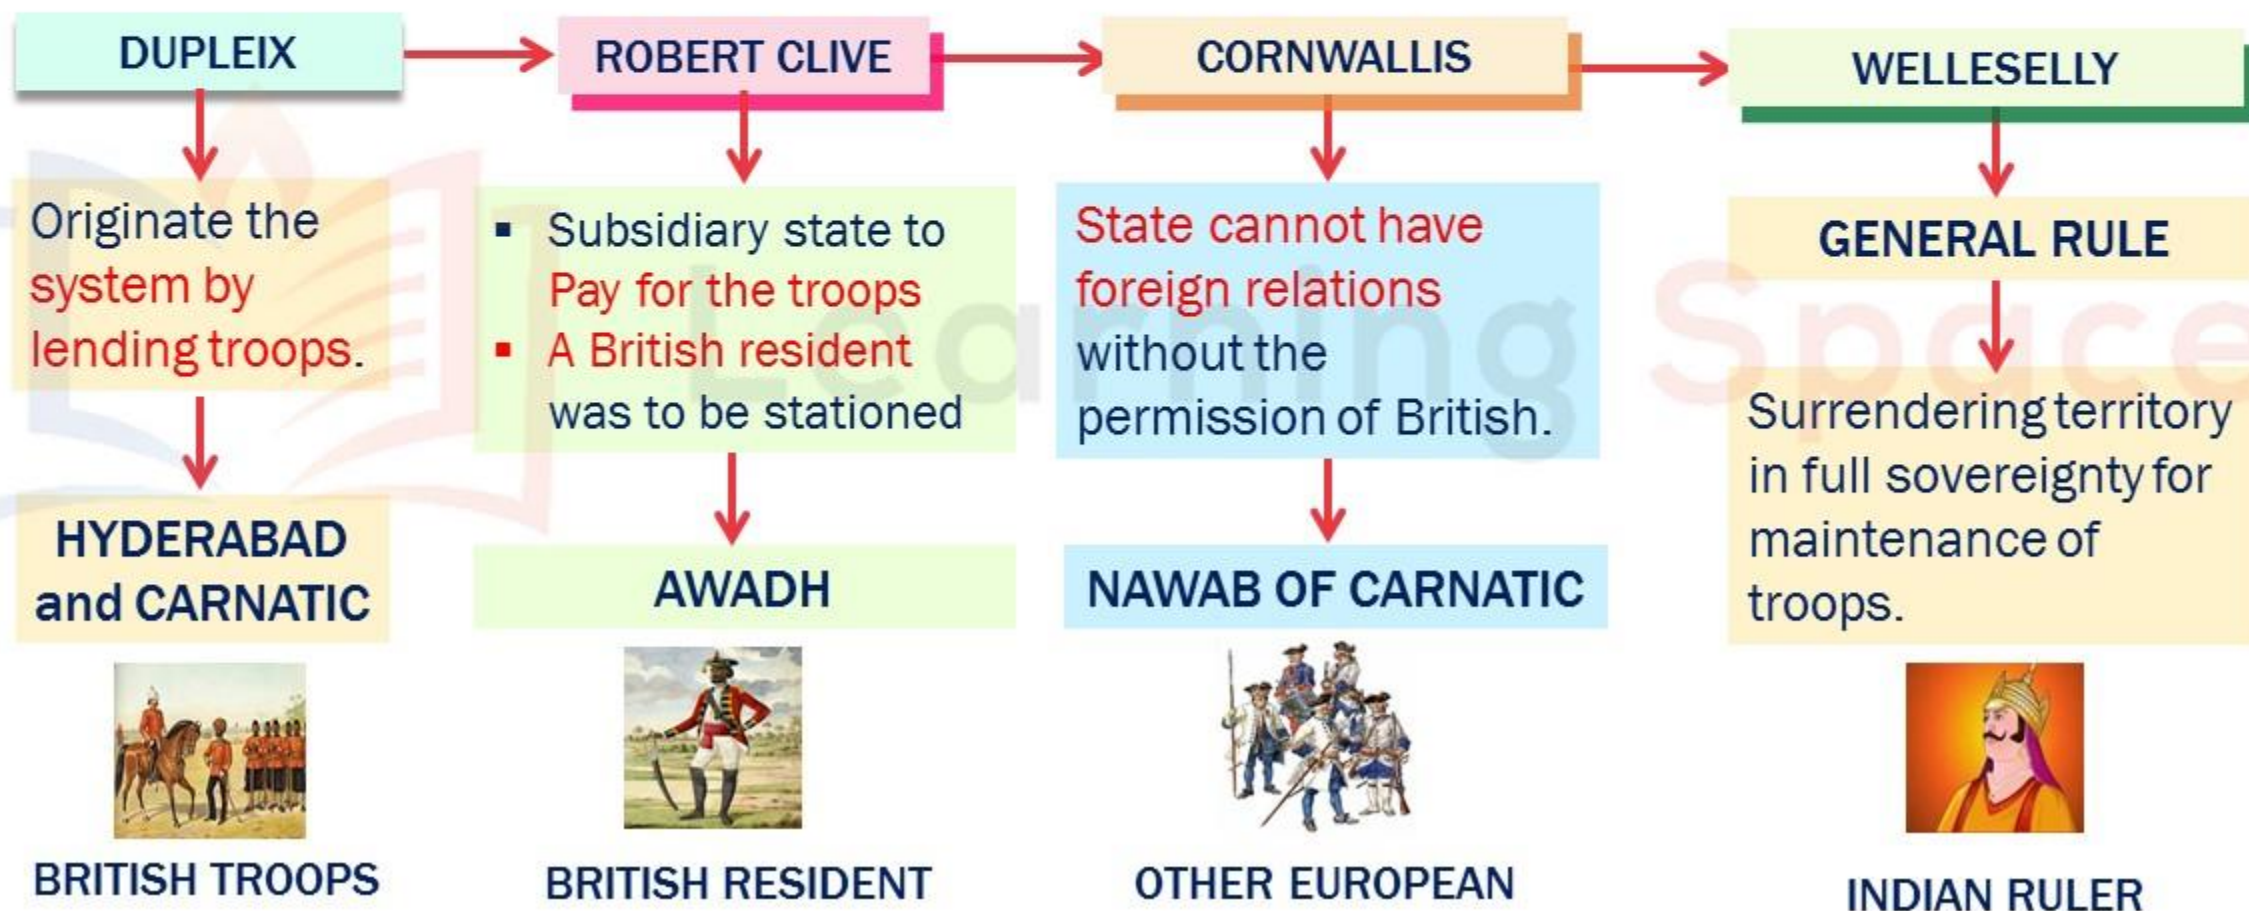

- Negotiate with any other Indian ruler
- Enter into offensive or defensive alliance
- Wage a war or conclude any peace..

SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

EVOLUTION AND PERFECTION

Since Dupleix almost all the governor-generals from Clive onwards applied the system to various Indian states and brought it to near perfection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF BRITISH EIC

SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

STAGES OF APPLICATION OF SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

FIRST STAGE

Military assistance to friendly neighbor state to fight wars.

SECOND STAGE

Company started playing bigger roles.

- Making common cause with the Indian state
- Both soldiers of state and company fight wars.

FOURTH STAGE

But Protection fee was fixed and high so when state failed to repay, it was asked to cede certain parts of its territories to the Company.
Asked to keep a permanent subsidiary force in capital.

THIRD STAGE

- The Company promised to
- Recruit, train, and maintain a contingent – for native states personal and family's protection
 - In return of fixed sum of money (protection fee).

SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

SIGNIFICANCE OF SUBSIDIARY ALLIANCE

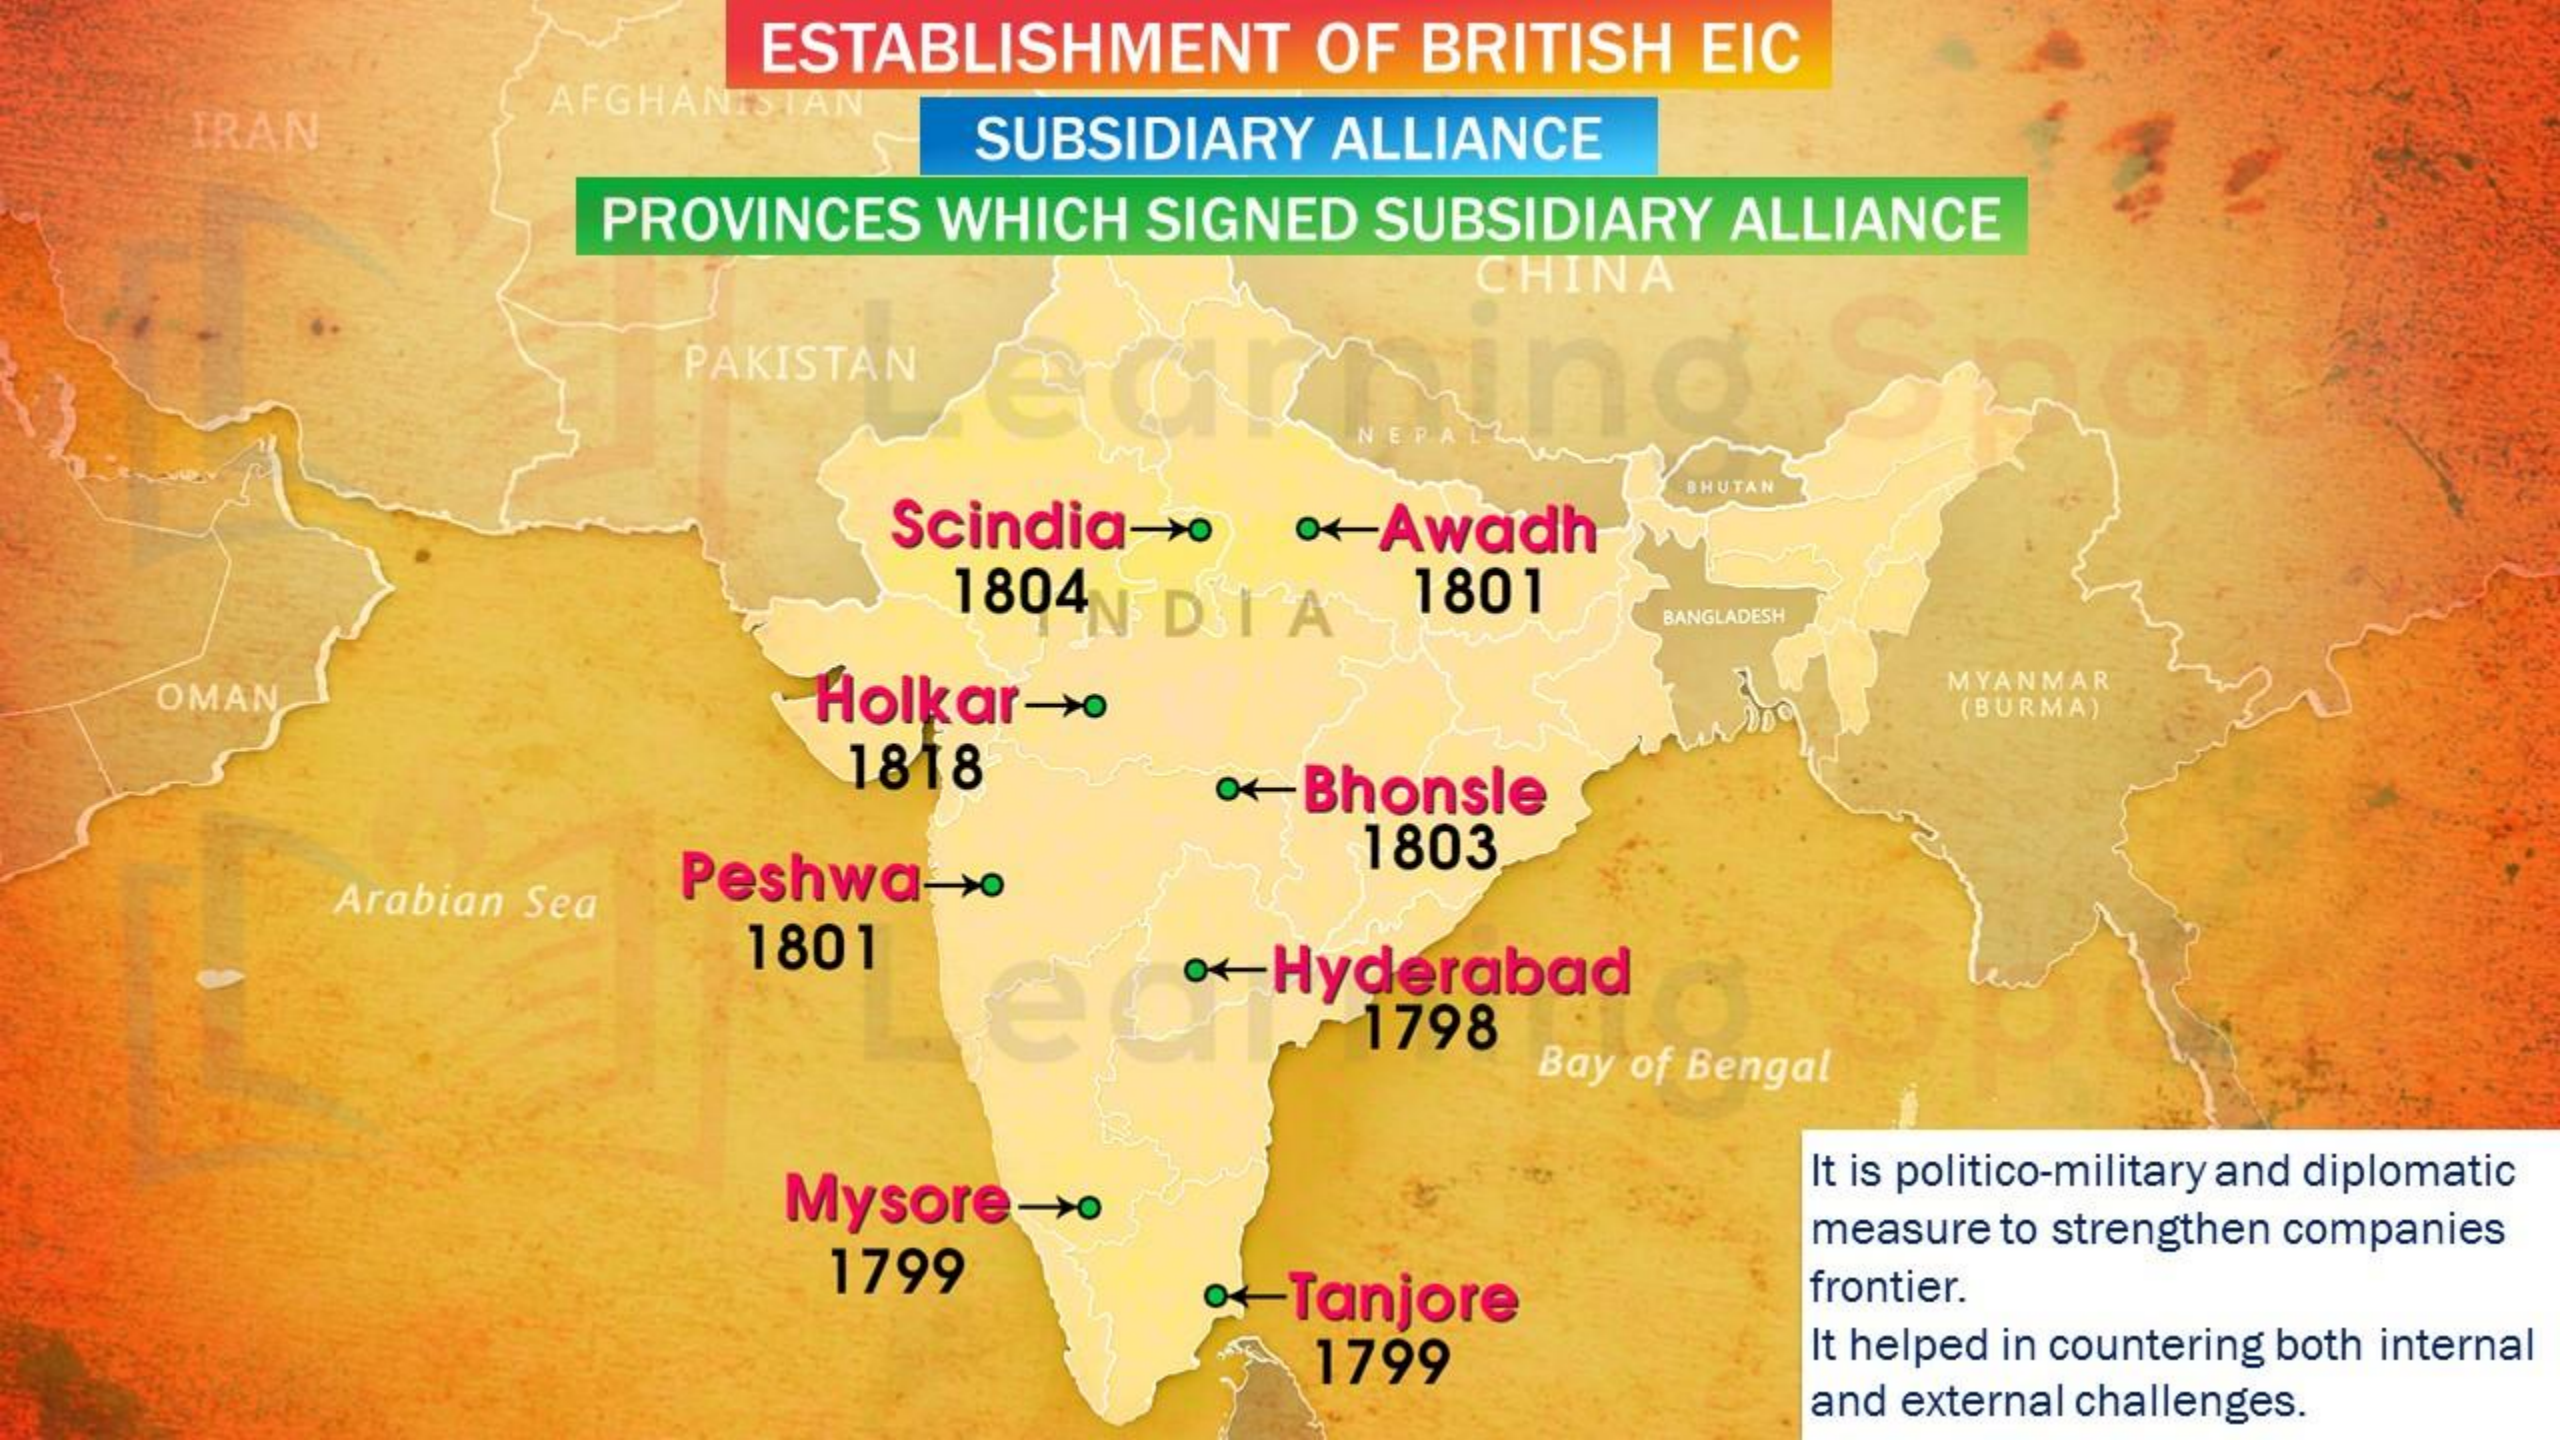

Seven-year rule of Wellesley alone, over 100 small and big states of India signed the subsidiary treaty.

- Helped in territorial expansion of British.
- Enabled company to maintain large force without any additional cost.
- Brought relative peace in subsidiary territories.
- It is a frozen horse tactics- Once native state signed it, there was no way to come out. It gradually disarmed state, capacity to oppose the company taken away and clock of paramountcy was put over it.
- Forces were stationed at places of greatest significance i.e capital of native state which gave company a strategic advantage and and effective mobilizing the troops. .

DALHOUSIE

Doctrine of Lapse

ESTABLISHMENT OF BRITISH EIC

DOCTRINE OF LAPSE

Doctrine stated that if the ruler of the state died without a natural heir to succeed him then his state would be annexed to the British territory.

LORD DALHOUSIE
(1848-1856)

Doctrine also states that the adopted son can inherit his father's private property, but not the state.

Though this policy is attributed to Lord Dalhousie (1848-56), but he was not its originator.

Maharaja Ranjit Singh had annexed a few of his feudatory principalities on account of 'lapse'.

It was for the paramount power to decide whether to bestow the authority of the state on the adopted son or to annex it.

DOCTRINE OF LAPSE

One important feature of this policy was that its applicability varied as per the nature of the state:

Independent states-
who never accepted
British paramountcy

Does not apply

Protected allies-
accepted paramountcy
and paid regular tribute

Permission for adopting a son to succeed the throne

Dependent states-
placed or installed on throne by British

Permission was not given at all

It was a coincidence that during his governor-generalship several important cases arose in which 'Doctrine' could be applied. And since Dalhousie being a staunch expansionist did not let any of opportunity of annexing the state to British India ever slip.

DOCTRINE OF LAPSE

Lord Dalhousie annexed Awadh in 1856 after deposing Nawab Wajid Ali Shah on grounds of misgovernment. It was not annexed on the grounds of Doctrine of lapse.

His reign almost completed the process of expansion of British power in India, which began with the victory over Siraj-ud-daula at Plassey in 1757.

DOCTRINE OF LAPSE

CRITICISM OF THE POLICY

UNFAIR ANNEXATION OF STATES

Principalities that were deprived of its estates became staunch enemy of the British

Their discontent ultimately led to great uprising of 1857

Armies of the annexed states were disbanded – they became unemployed and ready to create trouble

Zamindars who lost their land after settlements of territory were made, they rebelled.

Annexation created a feeling of insecurity and uneasiness in the minds of surviving states

No court of appeal to challenge the decision
